Hence it is truly said in this chapter, 'There was nothing in the ark save the two tables which Moses put therein at Horeb. ALMYRA ROAD, LEADING TO TADMOR—BUILT BY KING SOLOMON. [II. CHRONICLES, viii:4.]—"And he built Tadmor (Palmyra) in the wilderness, and all the store cities, which he built in Hamath." Palmyra in Old Testament times was called Tadmor. This city Solomon rebuilt 1000 B. C. in the wilderness east of Cilead between Damascus and the Euphrates. About 333 B. C. its name was changed to Palmyre. In A. D. 130 it submitted to Hadrian. In 260 Odenathus defeated Sapor King of Persia, and in 266 Zenobia the wife of Sapor took the title of Queen of the East. Between 272 and 273 Aurelian besieged and took it. Its ruins covered several miles. There was a Temple of the Sun here, 90 columns of which still remain. Above we have a view of the road that passes Palmyra immediately after it leaves Damascus.

10 And these were the chief of king Solomon's officers, even "two hundred and fifty, that bare rule over the people.

11 ¶ And Solomon brought up the daughter of Pharaoh out of the city of David unto the house that he had built for her: for he said, My wife shall not dwell in the house of David king of Israel, because the places are holy,4 whereunto the ark of the Lord hath come.5

The position of the city bears some resemblance to that of Damascus. It lies along It lies along the base of a white limestone ridge, through which a deep glen cuts opposite the ruins. A sulphureous fountain bursts from a cliff, runs eastward, watering gardens and orchards of palms and pomegranates, and disappears in a salt marsh. On the undulating ground along the left or northern bank of this streamlet lie the ruins of Tadmor. On the east and south a desert plain, not of sand however, as is usually stated, extends to

A secure route for the caravans that imported to his little kingdom the treasures of India, Persia, and Mesopotamia was of great importance; he therefore built Tadmor in the wilderness. REFLECTIONS.—In the most profound peace w had need to prepare for war, spiritual or temporal. It is an honour for kings to manifest the utmost regard to their subjects. How certainly, however slowly, Noah's curse of servitude fixes at last upon the descendants of Canaan! They become slaves to the offspring of Shem through the influence of the Lord his God. It is necessary to set bounds to our desires after created It is necessary to set bounds to our desires after created things, as they are apt to become inordinate and insatiable. It is no less necessary to keep up proper distinctions between things sacred and common. And we shall find difficulty therein if we ally ourselves in marriage, or in any other way, with the ungodly. What an excellent foundation, for even external properity, is a prudent and active zeal for, and constant attendance on the worship of God! But alas! how attendance on, the worship of God! But, alas! how great the folly that, while men will risk and do so much for earthly treasures, so little is done to obtain the riches which endure for ever!

30 And Solomon reigned in Jerusalem over all Israel forty years.

31 And Solomon slept with his fathers;6 and he was buried in the city of David his father: and Rehoboam his son reigned in his stead.

2 And it came to pass, when Jeroboam the son of Nebat (who was in Egypt, bwhither he had fled from the presence of Solomon the king) heard it, that Jeroboam returned out of Egypt.

So all Israel went to their tents.1

17 But as for the children of Israel that dwelt in the cities of Judah, Rehoboam reigned over them.

18 Then king Rehoboam sent  Hadoram that was over the tribute;2 and the children of Israel stoned him with stones, that he died: but king Rehoboam made speeds to get him up to his chariot, to flee to Jerusalem.

19 And Israel rebelled against the house of David unto this day.5

CHAPTER XI.

1 Rehoboam raising an army to subduc Israel, is forbidden by the prophet Shemaiah. 5 He strengtheneth his kingdom with Juris and provision. 13 The priests and Levites, and such as feared God, forsaken by Jeroboam, strengthen the kingdom of Judah. 18 The wives and children of Rehoboam.

ND when Rehoboam was come to Jeru $oldsymbol{A}$ salem, he gathered of the house of Judah and Benjamin an hundred and fourscore thousand chosen men, which were warriors, to fight against Israel, that he might bring the kingdom again to Rehoboam.

2 But the word of the LORD came to Shemaiah the bman of God, saying,

3 Speak unto Rehoboam the son of Solomon king of Judah, and to all Israel in Judah and Benjamin, saying,

4 Thus saith the Lord, Ye shall not go up, nor fight against your brethren: return every man to his house; for this thing is done of And they obeyed the words of the Lord, and returned from going against Jeroboam.

Great souls are ever generous; and ought to be so, according to their stations and ability. But not the most engaging things on earth ought long to detain us from that home in which God calls us to act for his glory. What a transient blaze is all the glory and wealth of earth! Ere it be long Solomon's family shall be poor and contemned. Yet God seems, family shall be poor and contemned. Yet God seems, as it were, unwilling to remember those sins against Solomon or any of his people, of which they have sincerely repented. What a sudden gloom death spreads over the brightest honours on earth! But rejoice, my soul, that Jesus has wisdom, has wealth, has glory, and fame, which neither death nor eternity can ever sully or consume! Of him it may truly be said, the half has or consume! Of him it may truly be said, the half has not been told us. Happy are they that wait around thic exalted King of Israel—chosen through the love

CHAPTER X. REFLECTIONS.—The hest of rulers cannot give every one content. Men are readier to complain of the expense of government than to acknowledge the benefit which they receive from it; and turbulent and ungrateful spirits will find fault where they can scarcely find the shadow of a reason. Young heads are ordinarily too hot to be wise counsellors and many ruin their own interests by trampling on and provoking their inferiors. provoking their inferiors. Moderate counsels are generally the most safe and prudent. Soft answers disarm men's passions when harsh ones render them furious: and when the affairs of church or state are in a ferment rough proceedings do but make them worse and worse. Most men need no more to ruin them

But O the wisdom and power of God, who can fulfill his counsels by men's folly and fury! Very uncertain are all earthly enjoyments: nor can the wisest secure them to his next heir. God often visits the iniquity of the fathers upon the children: but amidst all the heat of his anger he never breaks his promise.

CHAPTER XI. [Ver. 14. Jeroboam established an idolatrous worship in his kingdom. The Levites, it appears, would not conduct his services. They preferred banishment to servitude under such a master. The kingdom of Judah was thus materially strengthened. In addition to the powerful tribes of Judah and Benjamin, it had the Levites, and also the great bulk of Simeon and Dan. In compactness and natural strength of territory, in unity and courage, in devotion of Simeon and Dan.

ND it came to pass, when Rehoboam had $m{A}$ established the kingdom, and had strength. ened himself, he forsook the law of the LORD, and all Israel with him.

2 And it came to pass, that, in the fifth year of king Rehoboam, Shishak king of Egypt came up against Jerusalem, because they had transgressed against the LORD,1

3 With atwelve hundred chariots, and threescore thousand horsemen: and the people were without number that came with him out of Egypt; the 'Lubims,' the Sukkiims,' and the Ethiopians.4

4 And he took the fenced cities which pertained to Judah, and came to Jerusalem.

5 Then came Shemaiah the prophet to Rehoboam, and to the princes of Judah, that were gathered together to Jerusalem because of Shishak, and said unto them, Thus saith the LORD, "Ye have forsaken me, and therefore have I also left you in the hand of Shishak.

6 Whereupon the princes of Israel and the king humbled themselves; and they said, The Lord is righteous.

7 And when the Lord saw that they humbled themselves, the word of the Lord came to Shemaiah, saying, They have humbled themselves; therefore I will not destroy them, but I will grant them some5 deliverance; and my wrath shall not be poured out upon Jerusalem by the hand of Shishak.

8 Nevertheless they shall be his servants; that they may know kmy service, and the service of the kingdoms of the countries.7

9 So Shishak king of Egypt came up against Jerusalem, and took away the treasures of the house of the Lord, and the treasures of the king's house; he took all: he carried away also the shields of gold which Solomon had "made.

10 Instead of which *king Rehoboam made shields of brass, and committed them to the hands of the chief of the guard, that kept the entrance of the king's house.8

11 And when the king entered into the house of the Lord, the guard came and fetched them, and brought them again into the guard-chamber.

Ver. 20. [Maachah was also the name of Absalom's mother, who was daughter of Talmai, king of Geshur. The name indicates that the Geshurites and Maachathites were closely related and originally of the same stock. In ch. 13. 2 there is a statement which at first sight seems to be at variance with this verse. Here it is said that Abijah was son of Maachah, daughter of Absalom, and the fact is corroborated by the parallel passage in I Ki. 15. 2; but in 2 Ch. it is said of Abijah that 'his mother's name was Michaiah, the daughter of Uriel of Gibeah.' The solution of the difficulty appears to be this:-Absalom's daughter

Maachah was married to Uriel, and their daughter, also called Maachah, became the mother of Abijah. Her father, however, being a comparatively obscure person, his name is omitted in the ordinary history, and she is called the daughter of Absalom, who was

REFLECTIONS.—How often is war too rashly undertaken! But it is in vain to withstand the purposes of God. And it is honourable to drop our darling attempts when he requires it. It is more prudent to make the best we can of what we have, and to take all lawful pains to secure it, than to fight for more. When nations are forsaking God, his faithful ministers are often singularly distressed; and yet none are more useful for strengthening a kingdom that deals kindly with them. It is proper that those who fear God should them. It is proper that those who fear God should leave their country when his ministers and worship are expelled from it. No secular advantage ought to carry or keep us where we must make shipwreck of faith and a good conscience. That is really best for us which is best for our souls. And in all our choices religion should take the lead of outward advantages. If for God's cake we forsels our worldly all we shall rengion should take the lead of outward advantages. If for God's sake we forsake our worldly all, we shall one day find ourselves great gainers. Such as suffer for righteousness' sake ought to be received by us with open arms. And never should we cleave more closely to Christ's faithful ministers than when they are persecuted. Seasons of persecution especially distinguish

The door has a bronze covering about forty-five feet in height. Kait Bey was Sultan of Egypt from 1468 to 1496. As a general and a diplomatist he successfully maintained his position against the Porte. He was compelled, finally, however, to abdicate in favor of his son, Mohammed, a boy of fourteen.

12 And owhen he humbled himself, the wrath of the Lord turned from him, that he would not destroy him altogether: Pand also in Judah things went well.

13 T So king Rehoboam strengthened himself in Jerusalem, and reigned: for Rehoboam was one and forty years old when he began to reign, and he reigned seventeen years in Jerusalem, the city "which the Lord had chosen out of all the tribes of Israel to put his name there: and his mother's name was Naamah an Ammonitess.

8 And now ye think to withstand othe kingdom of the LORD in the hand of the sons of David; and ye be pa great multitude, and there are with you golden calves, which Jeroboam made you for gods.

9 Have ye not cast out the priests of the LORD, the sons of Aaron, and the Levites,9 and have made you priests after the manner of the nations of other lands? so that whosoever cometh to consecrate himself with a young bullock and seven rams,1 the same may be a priest of them that are no gods.

10 But as for us, the Lord is our God, and we have not forsaken him; and the priests, which minister unto the LORD, are "the sons of Aaron, and the Levites wait upon their business:

11 And they burn unto the Lord, every morning and every evening, burnt-sacrifices and sweet incense: the "show-bread also set they in order upon the pure table; and the candlestick of gold, with the lamps thereof, to burn every evening: for we keep the charge of the Lord our God; but ye have forsaken him.

REFLECTIONS.—They who in adversity appear faithful for God often forsake him in their prosperity.

Nav earthly presentity is a common according for the Nay, earthly prosperity is a common occasion of ruin to the soul. Human supports and fenced cities prove but refuges of lies when God withdraws or becomes our destroyer And to punish men's sins, he often turns their old friends, or even relations, into inveterate enemies. God's word comes to men with peculiar advantage when awakening providences concur with it: and stupid and self-conceited sinners must have the plainest providences explained to them before they understand They whom the Lord hath left ought to blame themselves as the guilty cause, and to humble them-selves under his mighty hand: for it is vain to project means of defence if we continue unhumbled for our sins. The greatest kings and princes must either be humbled or ruined: and we are never humbled aright till we justify God in our sufferings. But how God's bowels yearn towards repenting prodigals! How forward he is to meet them with merciful deliverances who humble themselves before him! Whenever we have hearts themselves before him! humbled under troubles they have done their work, and shall either be removed or have their nature altered into tokens of kindness. And it is a great mercy to a into tokens of kindness. And it is a great mercy to a sinful people if God but grant a partial deliverance. It is well if the guilt be removed, though we should smart in the flesh for it. They who reckon God a hard master, and his service burdensome, will find the slavery and wages of their lusts but a miserable exchange It is far more honourable and safe to endure the utmost hardships in obeying God than to risk the punishments of disobedience. But how easily God can restrain the fury of the most outrageous conquerors by his invisible arm, and set limits to their ravages! and for himself. Judgments which make us learn righteousness are mercies in disguise. But if our heart be not engaged in the service of God all is naught. who never had their heart fixed to him, and never made real religion their principal business, are easily drawn to anything evil. Though God's judgments may force men to their prayers, nothing but almighty grace can convert them to himself. And, alas! how many in his church do but cumber the ground while they live, and in a moment go down to their grave!

CHAPTER XIII. REFLECTIONS. - What multitudes do wicked princes render subservient to their lusts! Before men proceed to the extremities of war, every peaceable method of accommodation ought to be tried; as, at least, all the death on the one side is murder, and often so on both. Many can talk finely of God and his service who have no heart-love to them or any correspondent practice. What an advantage in war is it to have a righteous cause and a powerful and gracious God on our side; and when we evidence it by not forsaking him, but by cleaving to his minis-ters and ordinances! But dangerous is their case who have ambition that cannot be satisfied, and who are emboldened by mere success! Prosperous iniquity is happy is it when, in evil times, he preserves a remnant but a short-lived joy. They who have God their the battle was before and behind: and they cried unto the Lord, and the priests sounded with the trumpets.

15 Then the men of Judah gave a shout: and as the men of Judah shouted, it came to pass, that God smote Jeroboam and all Israel before Abijah and Judah.

16 And the children of Israel fled before Judah; and God delivered them into their hand.

17 And Abijah and his people slew them with a great slaughter: so there fell down slain of Israel five hundred thousand chosen men.3

18 Thus the children of Israel were brought under at that time, and the children of Judah prevailed, because they brelied upon the LORD God of their fathers.

19 And Abijah 'pursued after Jeroboam, and took cities from him, Beth-el with the towns thereof, and Jeshanah with the towns thereof, and Ephraim with the towns thereof.

20 Neither did Jeroboam recover strength again in the days of Abijah: and the LORD struck him, and he died.

21 ¶ But Abijah waxed mighty, and married fourteen" wives, and begat twenty and two sons, and sixteen daughters.

enemy will find all human efforts in vain. And the fair warnings, that render them inexcusable in their obstinacy, will occasion their more distinguished ruin. How often are princes occupied in laying ambushments of war and death when they should be treating of solid and lasting peace! But earnest supplications to God are more powerful than carnal stratagems: and he often lets his people fall into the most imminent danger, to awaken their cries, exercise their faith, and make their deliverance the more glorious. But if we are enabled to trust in him we shall not be moved. The prayer of faith and shouts of victory are inseparable. Civil wars and disputes among brethren are generally the most bitter and bloody: and what multitudes of souls doth a furious war hurry headlong and thoughtless into an eternal state, and most of them into the depths of hell! Nor can the mightiest escape the strokes of God's wrath and darts of death.

It is probable that two distinct kinds of high-places are spoken of-one dedicated to the worship of idols, which were removed; another dedicated to the worship of God, though in a manner not authorized, which were permitted to remain. Of the latter kind was perhaps the high-place at Bethel, and that on the top of the Mount of Olives. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—What a mercy to a church and nation are pious and reforming princes! And it is comely and pleasing when those who attempt to reform others show themselves proper patterns of virtue and devotion: when they act with due patience and prudence, as well as holy zeal; seeking to draw men from their abominations, without offering violence to their persons. However difficult or dangerous it may appear to recover the transfer fainties and for Columbia. pear to repress the torrent of iniquity, zeal for God, and dependence on his assistance, will work wonders. Nay, when princes act with due steadiness and zeal in the suppression of profaneness and idolatry, they often find less difficulty than they at first imagined. Men's consciences side with the reforming laws, even while their inclinations are against them. Outward peace and prosperity must be considered as a great mercy. And this reward of fidelity to and trust in God should be improved to promote true religion: yet in the most

CHAPTER XVI.

1 Asa, by the aid of the Syrians, diverteth Bassha from building of Ramah. 7 Being reproved thereof by Hanani, he putteth him in prison. 11 Among his other acts in his disease he seeketh not to God, but to the physicians. 13 His death and burial.

TN the six and thirtieth year of the reign¹ of Asa, Baasha king of Israel came up against Judah, and built Bamah, to the intent that he might let none go out or come in to Asa king of Judah.2

2 Then Asa brought out silver and gold out of the treasures of the house of the LORD and of the king's house, and sent to Ben-hadad king of Syria, that dwelt at Damascus, saying,

3 There is a league between me and thee, as there was between my father and thy father: behold, I have sent thee silver and gold; go, break thy league with Baasha king of Israel, that he may depart from me.

4 And Ben-hadad hearkened unto king Asa, and sent the captains of his armies against the cities of Israel; and they smote Ijon, and Dan, and Abel-maim, and all the store-cities of Naphtali.6

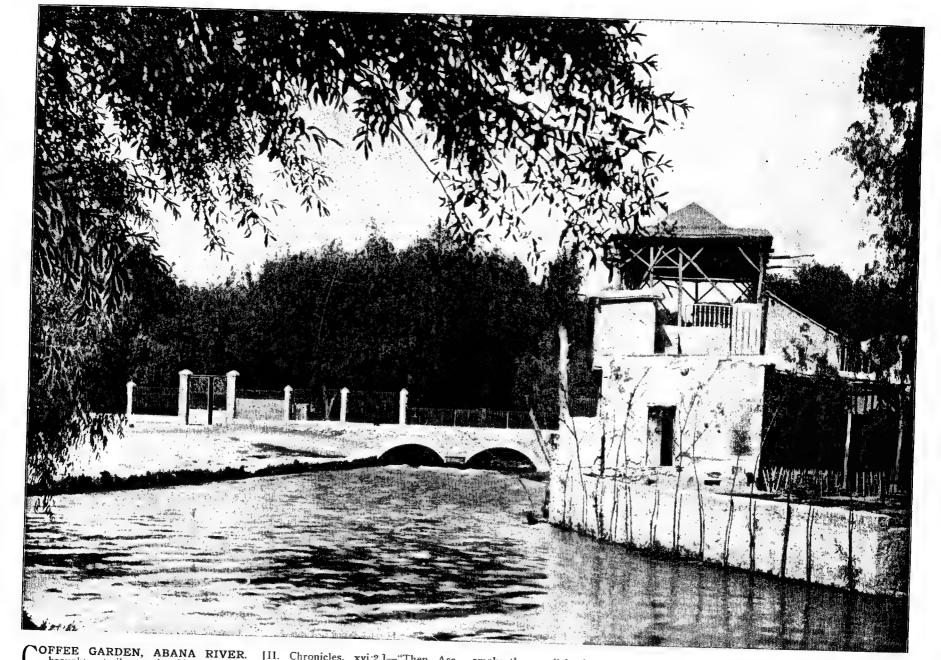

profound peace it is proper to prepare for war: the clouds will return after the rain. God often tries his God often tries his people with great danger and distress while they are proceeding in their duty in the work of reformation: proceeding in their duty in the work of reformation: but there is no craft or might that can prevail against the Lord their God. And in such cases he is ready to answer their prayer of faith, and grant them an easy victory over their enemies, spiritual or temporal. But how dreadful is the guilt of princes who rashly hurry multitudes of their subjects into ruin, death, and hell! Often they who assist the Lord's enemies against his people share in their just punishments: and the wealth people share in their just punishments: and the wealth of the sinner is laid up for the just.

in vain; but that the case of churches and nations is extremely bad when God forsakes them; and that the hurt which we or others have sustained by sin ought to deter us from it. God's work must be done with unanimity, cheerfulness, and resolution; and we must draw as many as we can into it. He must be served with the first and best of what providence brings to our with the first and best of what providence brings to our hand: and all our religious performances are to no purpose except they be hearty and sincere. Notwithstanding the high obligations of God's law on our consciences, to the whole of our duty, it is often necessary that we bind our souls to it by bonds, oaths, and covenants with God, in order to fortify us against temptation, and engage us to holiness, or to renew those public covenants into which our fathers entered for themselves and us. Public covenanting with God is of great use observe that God grants peace and victory to his people to animate them to their duty; that none ever seek him in times of reformation; and ought always to be grounded on the covenant of grace and the great sacrifice of on the covenant or grace and the great sacrince of Jesus Christ; performed with much knowledge, faith, integrity, delight, and cheerfulness; and nothing engaged to in it but what is plainly warranted by God. It is both an honour and happiness for nations to be under such vows. And great care, faithfulness, and impartiality quality to be exercised in extirpating idolatry, and tiality ought to be exercised in extirpating idolatry, and in punishing obstinate idolaters for their treasonable rebellion against God, the King of kings. piety procures national happiness; yet none experience the real pleasures of religion but such as are sincere and upright in it; to such, though they be not sinless, God's service brings its own comfort and reward along with it.

CHAPTER XVI. REFLECTIONS.—The strongest faith may soon be shaken: and unbelief will make the best to fall into a variety of evils. What reliance the best to fall into a variety of evils.

OFFEE GARDEN, ABANA RIVER. [II. Chronicles, xvi:2.]—"Then Asa brought out silver and gold out of the treasures of the house of the Lord and of the king's house, and sent to Ben-hadad, king of Syria, that dwelt at Damascus." Cone of the things that will strike any traveler at Damascus is the great number of coffee gardens, which are found in different portions of the city. These gardens upon some one of their sides usually front the Abana river. The natives gather here to nelittiviptiki...hinjikihinikihinohitto-rininbodo so smoke the nargileh pipe or cigarette and to drink black coffee. These gardens are filled with large trees and adorned by beautiful flowering shrubs. Rose bushes grow in all of them, and roses are taken from these gardens with which to make the famous attar of roses. During the night, when the gardens are illuminated, they look as if they might be scenes of the Arabian Nights. The great charm of Damascus is its abundant supply of water.

- 5 And it came to pass, when Baasha heard it, that he left off building of Ramah, and let his work cease.
- 6 Then Asa the king took all Judah; and they carried away the stones of Ramah, and the timber thereof, wherewith Baasha was a building; and he built therewith "Geba and Mizpah.
- 7 ¶ And at that time Hanani the seer came to Asa king of Judah, and said unto him, *Because thou hast relied on the king of Syria, and not relied on the Lord thy God, therefore is the host of the king of Syria escaped, out of thine hand.
- 8 Were not the Ethiopians and the Lubims a huge host, with very many chariots and horsemen? yet, because thou didst rely on the LORD, he delivered them into thine hand.
- 9 For the meyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth, "to show himself strong in the behalf of them whose heart is perfect toward him. Herein thou hast done foolishly: therefore from henceforth thou shalt have wars.
- 10 Then Asa was pwroth with the seer,9 and put him in a prison-house; for he was in a rage with him because of this thing. And Asa oppressed1 some of the people "the same time.

11 ¶ And, behold, the acts of Asa, first and last, lo, they are written in the book of the kings of Judah and Israel.

- 5 Therefore the Lord stablished the kingdom in his hand: and all Judah brought to Jehoshaphat hpresents; and he had riches and honour in abundance.
- 6 And his heart was lifted up2 in the ways of the Lord: moreover, he took away the high places and groves out of Judah.

7 ¶ Also, in the third years of his reign, the sent to his princes, even to Ben-hail, and to Obadiah, and to Zechariah, and to Nethaneel, and to Michaiah, to teach in the cities of Judah.

8 And with them he sent Levites, even Shemaiah, and Nethaniah, and Zebadiah, and Asahel, and Shemiramoth, and Jehonathan, and Adonijah, and Tob-adonijah, Levites; and with them Elishama and Jehoram, ^mpriests.

can there be on an arm of flesh! What enticement is can there be on an arm of flesh! What enticement is there, or even hiring of men, to perjury, and to murdering of God's people, by the plunder of his temple! But opposition to God's people, or murdering of them, though it should be by the hand of heathens, brings along with it the most fearful ruin. And often, particularly in carnal expedients to extricate themselves, even good men act against their experience, their know. even good men act against their experience, their know ledge, and their interest, all at once: often in pride they hate, and in passion they persecute, their faithful eprovers; and, even in distress, overlook God, and depend on means carnal or devilish. O what need we have to consider our ways, to keep our heart with all diligence, and to pray for peculiar grace to keep us to the end! All our departures from God spring from the end! All our departures from God spring from our evil heart of unbelief: and the very means which we use unlawfully to avert trouble will bring it more heavily upon us. Sinful wisdom will at last appear egregious folly. Passion, and impatience of reproof, will issue in bitter groans. Rewarding of God's messengers with imprisonment will issue in our own confinement on earth or in hell; and if our despreta finement on earth or in hell: and if our desperate wickedness of heart be indulged, it will mark us with lasting shame. But notwithstanding all their sad blemishes, the godly die in Christ, and must be had in honour by their survivors.

CHAPTER XVII. 13 And Micaiah said, As the LORD liveth, even what my God saith, that will I speak.

14 And when he was come to the king, the king said unto him, Micaiah, shall we go to Ramoth-gilead to battle, or shall I forbear? And he said, 'Go ye up, and prosper, and they shall be delivered into your hand.

16 Then he said, I did see all Israel scattered upon the mountains, as tsheep that have no shepherd: and the Lord said, These have no master; let them return therefore every man to his house in peace.

17 And the king of Israel said to Jehoshaphat, Did I not tell thee that he would not prophesy good unto me, but evil?7

18 Again he said, Therefore hear the word of the LORD; I saw "the LORD sitting upon his throne,8 and all the host of heaven standing on his right hand and on his left.

Ahab succeeded Omri as king of Israel in 918 B. C. In B. C. 912 an alliance was made between Jehoshaphat and Ahab. About the same time Megacles was the chief archon of Athens, and it was during this period that the Eupatrids arose in open revolt and besieged the Acropolis in Athens. Illustrating this contemporaneous Greek history we give a picture of the Agora temple in Athens which stands just beneath the Acropolis on the side of the north wall, and is doubtless in the very neighborhood of the revolt led by Cylon Cylon was of the highest rank and position, and a man of great wealth who suddenly appeared in arms against the Athenian government. ND Jehoshaphat the king of Judah returned A to his house in peace to Jerusalem.

2 And Jehu the son of Hanani the seer went out to meet him, and said to king Jehoshaphat, Shouldest thou help the ungodly, and love them that hate the Lord? therefore is wrath upon thee from before the LORD.1

3 Nevertheless there are good things found in thee, in that thou hast taken away the 2groves out of the land, and hast prepared thine heart to seek God.

4 ¶ And Jehoshaphat dwelt at Jerusalem: and he went out again through the people, from Beer-sheba to mount Ephraim,3 and brought them back unto the Lord God of their fathers.

5 \P And he set judges in the land, throughout all the fenced cities of Judah, city by city;

6 And said to the judges, Take heed what ye do; for ye judge not for man, but for the LORD, who is with you in the judgment.5

7 Wherefore now let the fear of the LORD be upon you; take heed and do it: for there is no iniquity with the LORD our God, nor respect of persons, nor taking of gifts.6

8 ¶ Moreover, in Jerusalem did Jehoshaphat set of the Levites, and of the priests, and of the chief of the fathers of Israel, for the judgment of the Lord, and for controversies, when they returned to Jerusalem.

9 And he charged them, saying, Thus shall ye do bin the fear of the LORD, faithfully, and

10 And what cause soever shall come to you of your brethren that dwell in their cities, between blood and blood,7 between law and commandment, statutes and judgments,8 ye shall even warn them that they trespass not against the Lord, and so wrath come upon you, and upon your brethren: this do, and ye shall not trespass.

11 And, behold, Amariah the chief priest is over you in all matters of the LORD; and Zebadiah the son of Ishmael, the ruler of the house of Judah, for all the king's matters: also the Levites shall be officers before you. Deal courageously, and the LORD shall be with the good.

What astonishing power hath Satan, when God once gives up men to his awful delusions! fully with us. Great multitudes, particularly of the clergy, he carries before him with great unanimity. But hard is the fate of God's faithful servants under rulers who are apostates from God, to be hated, reviled, buffeted, imprisoned, according to the principles of judgment contained in starved, or the like. But they must expect, if entering into friendship with the haters of God, that it will expose them to manifold sufferings on earth, though not to hell. It is an honour when sufferings cannot discourage ministers or their children from faithfully reproving the greatest; and it is a great mercy for an offender to meet soon with a faithful reprover: and no less wise to receive sharp reproofs as a singular kindness; and to improve them,

15 And he said, Hearken ye, all Judah, and ye inhabitants of Jerusalem, and thou king Jehoshaphat, Thus saith the Lord unto you, Be not afraid nor dismayed by reason of this great multitude; for the battle is not yours, but °God's.1

17 Ye shall not need to fight in this battle: set yourselves, stand ye still, and see the salvation of the Lord with you, O Judah and Jerusalem: fear not, nor be dismayed: to-morrow go out against them; for the LORD will be with you.

18 And Jehoshaphat bowed his head with his face to the ground: and all Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem fell before the LORD, worshipping the Lord.

19 And the Levites, of the children of the Kohathites, and of the children of the Korhites, stood up to praise the Lord God of Israel with a loud voice on high.

20 ¶ And they grose early in the morning, and went forth into the wilderness of Tekoah: and as they went forth, Jehoshaphat stood and said, Hear me, O Judah, and ye inhabitants of Jerusalem; Believe in the Lord your God, so shall ye be established; believe his prophets, so shall ye prosper.

What a blessing to a nation is it to have proper courts of judicature everywhere established, and causes decided with the strictest impartiality! And great ability and integrity are necessary to qualify judges in either church or state, as they have to answer to God for all the crimes they connive at or overlook. it is needful to keep the affairs of church and state duly disengaged the one from the other. And to render judges upright in their administration, they ought to consider God as their pattern, witness, and rewarder; and his glory as the end of their work.

as follows: - 'And it came to pass after this, the children of Moab, and the children of Ammon, and with them of the Ammonites.' The last clause has no meaning, for 'the children of Ammon' would evidently be the same as the 'Ammonites.' In some of the ancient Hebrew MSS, there is a variation in the reading in this word. One has Edomites, which greatly resembles Ammonites, and might easily be mistaken by a copyist. This reading is corroborated by the Targum. I think it highly probable that this was the original reading. The Septuagint has Minaites, who were a people of Arabia Felix. P.]

Ver. 36. [In the parallel passage, 1 Ki. 22. 48, it is said, 'Jehoshaphat made ships of Tarshish to go to Ophir for gold, but they went not, for the ships were broken at Ezion-geber.' Here it is said he made 'ships to go to Tarshish; and they made the ships at Ezion-gaber.' This gives rise to a geographical difficulty. It is evident from a large number of incidental statements in Scripture that Tarshish was situated in statements in Scripture that Tarshish was situated in the Mediterranean, Jonah 1. 3; 4. 2; Is. xxiii. &c. But Ezion-geber was on the Red Sea, which had then no 33 Howbeit the high places were not taken away; for as yet the people chad not prepared their hearts unto the God of their fathers.

34 Now the rest of the acts of Jehoshaphat, first and last, behold, they are written in the book of Jehu the son of Hanani, who is mentioned⁸ in the book of the kings of Israel.

Houbigant renders the passage:

OW Jehoshaphata slept with his fathers, N OW Jenosnapnar siept with his fathers in the city of David; and Jehoram his son reigned in his stead.

2 And he had brethren, the sons of Jehoshaphat, Azariah, and Jehiel, and Zechariah, and Azariah, and Michael, and Shephatiah: all these were the sons of Jehoshaphat king of Israel.1

3 And their father bgave them great gifts of silver, and of gold, and of precious things, with fenced cities in Judah: but the kingdom gave he to Jehoram, because he was the first.

4 Now when Jehoram was risen up to the kingdom of his father, he 'strengthened himself, and slew2 all his brethren with the sword, and divers also of the princes of Israel.

5 ¶ Jehoram was thirty and two years old when he began to reign; and he reigned eight years³ in Jerusalem.

6 And he walked in the way of the kings of Israel, like as did the house of Ahab; for he had the daughter of Ahab to wife: and he wrought that which was evil in the eyes of the Lord.

7 Howbeit the Lord would not destroy the house of David, because of the covenant that he had made with David, and as he 'promised to give a light to him and to his sons for bever.

8 In his days the Edomites revolted from under the dominion6 of Judah, and made themselves a king.

communication by water with the Mediterranean except round the Cape of Good Hope. We can hardly suppose that even though the circumnavigation of Africa was known to the Phoenicians, they would have ever started from Ezion-geber to go to Tarshish in Spain, when they could proceed direct from the port of Joppa or Tyre. 'Ships of Tarshish' probably meant 'large ships,' like our 'Indiamen.' This would explain the statement in Kings; but it would not remove the difficulty from this passage. The true solution appears to be that there were two places called Tarshish: one in Spain, on the shore of the Mediterranean, the other on difficulties, for the trial and honour of our faith. In the coast of the Indian Ocean. This view is corroborated by I Ki. 9, 26 with 2 Ch. 9, 21 and I Ki. 10, 22. The imports landed at Ezion-geber from Tarshish prove 10 So the Edomites revolted from under the hand of Judah unto this day. The same time also did "Libnah" revolt from under his hand; because "he had forsaken the Lord God of his fathers.

11 Moreover 'he made high places in the mountains of Judah, and reaused the inhabitants of Jerusalem to commit 4fornication,9 and compelled Judah thereto.

12 ¶ And there came¹ a writing to him from Elijah the prophet,2 saying, Thus saith the LORD God of David thy father, Because thou hast not walked in the ways of Jehoshaphat thy father, nor in the ways of Asa king of Judah,

13 But hast twalked in the way of the kings of Israel, and hast made Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem to go a "whoring, like to the whoredoms of the house of Ahab, and also hast slain thy brethren of thy father's house, which were better than thyself;

14 Behold, with "a great plague will the Lord smite thy people, and thy children, and thy wives, and all thy goods.

15 And thou shalt have great sickness by disease of thy bowels, until thy bowels fall out by reason of the sickness day by day.

16 ¶ Moreover, the Lord stirred up against Jehoram the spirit of the Philistines, and of the Arabians, that were near the Ethiopians:

17 And they came up into Judah, and brake into it, and *carried away all the substance that was found in the king's house, and his sons also, and his wives; so that there was never a son left him, save Jehoahaz, athe youngest of his-sons.

18 ¶ And after all this the Lord smote him in his bowels with an incurable disease.

19 And it came to pass, that in process of time, after the end of two years, his bowels fell out by reason of his sickness; so he died of sore diseases: and his people made no burning for him, like the burning of his fathers.

ND the inhabitants of Jerusalem made A Ahaziaha his youngest son king in his stead: for the band of men that came with the Arabians to the camp had slain all the eldest. So Ahaziah the son of Jehoram king of Judah reigned.

2 Forty and two years old was Ahaziah when he began to reign; and he reigned one year in Jerusalem: his mother's name also was Athaliah, the daughter of Omri.

3 He also walked din the ways of the house of Ahab:1 for his mother was his counsellor to do wickedly.

4 Wherefore he did evil in the sight of the Lord like the house of Ahab: for they were his counsellors, after the death of his father, to his destruction.

5 ¶ He walked also after their counsel, and went with Jehoram the son of Ahab king of Israel to war against Hazael king of Syria at Ramoth-gilead: and the Syrians smote Joram.

6 And he returned to be healed in Jezreel, because of the wounds which were given 2him at Ramah, when he fought with Hazael king of Syria. And Azariah hthe son of Jehoram king of Judah went down to see Jehoram the son of Ahab at Jezreel, because he was sick.

we are taken off from every self-dependence in the view of our wants and wretchedness, we are the more sure to find help in the time of need. If faith and hope look upward, the everlasting arms will be underneath us. In our cries to God for deliverance, let us therefore plead his tender promises to us, the grants he has made us, his ability to protect and deliver us; and the ingratitude, injustice, and violence of our enemies: for readily God bestows his answers of peace to his people: and happy are they who, renouncing their unpeople: and happy are they who, renouncing their un-believing fears, go forth, assured by faith that it shall be to them as he hath spoken. Unshaken faith is a certain cause of victory: and even songs of praise are excellent weapons in our spiritual warfare. easily deliver his people, and employ their strongly confederated enemies to destroy one another: yea, he can turn his people's distress into means of their enrichment, honour, safety, and peace. And it becomes us, in such noted deliverances, to join in solemn thanksgiving, and to set up some lasting memorials of his kindness.-But O, how hard is it to render reformation thoroughly complete; and to wean the best of men from sins which easily beset them, even when they have before smarted for them! But it is kind in God to continue a reprover to us: and it is great gain if our providential losses turn us from the path of evil.

REFLECTIONS.—What monsters are bred in the best of families; or, at least, are made so by unhal-lowed marriages! And none are such plagues to families and kingdoms as ungrateful heirs. Ambition is deaf to the cries of nature or humanity: and those whom duty and interest require to protect us, become our destroyers. But how tormented are the minds of tyrants, and how tottering those thrones which are established in blood! God can take the most unthought-of methods to threaten or to punish his incompanion. veterate enemies. And torment, misery, and disgrace most surely await them. Dreadful is the situation when tormenting agonies, an awakened conscience, and an opening hell, meet the sinner on his death-bed! But miserable are the happiest tyrants.—When alive they are hated; and when dead they are branded with infamy, and lost in despair!

CHAPTER XXII. REFLECTIONS.—Certain is their ruin who wilfully commit sin, and dread-

they buried him; Because (said they) he is the son of Jehoshaphat, "who sought the LORD with all his heart. So the house of Ahaziah had no power to keep still the kingdom.

10 ¶ But' when Athaliah, the mother of Ahaziah, saw that her son was dead, she arose and destroyed all the seed-royal of the house of Judah.

11 But Jehoshabeath, the daughter of the king,8 tookp Joash the son of Ahaziah, and stole him from among the king's sons that were slain. and put him and his nurse in a ebed-chamber.9 So Jehoshabeath, the daughter of king Jehoram, the wife of 'Jehoiada the priest, (for she was the sister of Ahaziah,) hid him from Athaliah, so that she slew him not.

12 And he was with them hid in the house of God six years: and Athaliah reigned over the land.

2 And they went about in Judah, and gathered the Levites¹ out of all the cities of Judah, and the chief of the fathers of Israel, and they came to Jerusalem.

of Professor Robinson has an investigation of the ancient gates of Jerusalem in his Biblical Researches in Patestine, vol. 1, p. 472. The notices respecting most of them, he thinks, are too indefinite to enable us to determine anything more than that some more than that some the standard wall. Thus the horse-gate, says he, evidently lay between the temple and the royal palace, and in proof of this he refers to the present passage.—I.

8 So the Levites, and all Judah, did according to all things that Jehoiada the priest had commanded, and took every man his men "that were to come in on the sabbath, with them that were to go out on the sabbath: for Jehoiada the priest dismissed not "the courses."

9 Moreover, Jehoiada the priest delivered to the captains of hundreds spears, and bucklers, and shields, that had been king David's, which were in the house of God.8

10 And he set all the people, every man having his weapon in his hand, from the right side of the temple to the left side of the temple, along by the altar and the temple, by the king round about.

11 Then they pbrought out the king's son, and put upon him the crown, and agave him the testimony,2 and made him king: and Jehoiada and his sons anointed him, and said, 'God save the king.

12 ¶ Now, when Athaliah heard the noise of the people running and praising the king, she came to the people into the house of the LORD:

13 And she looked, and, behold, the king stood at this pillars at the entering in, and the princes and the trumpets by the king: and all the people of the land rejoiced, "and sounded with trumpets; also the singers with instruments of music, and such as taught to sing praise. Then Athaliah rent her clothes, and said, *Treason, treason!

14 Then Jehoiada the priest brought out the captains of hundreds that were set over the host, and said unto them, Have her forth of the ranges; and whose followeth her, let him be slain with the sword. For the priest said, Slay her not in the house of the LORD.

15 So they laid hands on her; and when she was come to the entering of the horse-gate by the king's house, they slew ther there.

16 ¶ And Jehoiada bmade a covenant between him, and between all the people, and between the king, that they should be the Lord's people.

17 Then all the people went to the house of ful the consequences of unhallowed marriages with the of her innocent, her orphan babes! And to the reungodly. Behold how the woman, for whose sake Jehoshaphat had cultivated friendship with Ahab, reduces his glorious kingdom and numerous family, nay his blessed reformation, to the brink of ruin! She had doubtless advised her husband to murder his brethren and princes, and to hurry himself through scenes of misery into endless woe. Now she counsels her son to do wickedly. Advised by her, he cultivates intimacy with Jehoram her brother, and involves himself and relations in his ruin. Behold the infuriated monster murdering princes, and imbruing her hands in the blood proach of Judah, the savage murderer, the vile idolater, is permitted to fill the sacred throne without so much as a shadow of title! But, meanwhile, behold how God, for his promise' sake, preserves in his house a young and helpless descendant of David to wear the crown, and even usher in the Messiah in his time! Vain is every attempt of earth and hell to defeat the word of truth; not one jot or tittle of it shall ever fail.

long interrupted. And it is a great mercy in critical times to have one of great prudence, piety, fidelity, courage, and influence to be principal director. How astonishing is it to see religion and liberty all at once recovered from the wrecks of ruin. But is there any thing too hard for the Lord? How mad for their opposers to rush headlong into immediate destruction!
But hopeful is the view when idols are destroyed, idolaters ashamed, the true worship of God regularly established, and his worshippers first giving themselves to the Lord, and afterwards to magistrates and ministers, and to one another, by the will of God!

Baal, and brake it down, and brake his altars and his images in pieces, and slew Mattan the priest of Baal before the altars.

18 Also Jehoiada appointed 4the offices of the house of the LORD by the hand of the priests the Levites, whom David had distributed in the house of the LORD, to offer the burntofferings of the 'LORD, as it is written in the law of Moses, with rejoicing and with singing, as it was ordained by David.7

19 And he set the porters at the gates of the house of the Lord, that none which was unclean in any thing should enter in.8

20 And he took the captains of hundreds, and the nobles, and the governors of the people, and all the people of the land, and brought down the king from the house of the Lord: and they came through the high gate into the king's house, and set the king upon the throne of the kingdom.

21 And hall the people of the land rejoiced: and the city was quiet, after that they had slain

Athaliah with the sword.

LORD, and of the congregation of Israel, for the tabernacle of witness?

7 For the ksons of Athaliah,4 that wicked woman, had broken up the house of God; and also all the dedicated things of the house of the Lord 'did they bestow upon Baalim.

8 And at the king's commandment they made ma chest, and set it without at the gate of the house of the Lord.5

9 And they made a *proclamation through Judah and Jerusalem, to bring in to the LORD the collection that Moses the servant of God laid upon Israel in the wilderness.

10 And all the princes and all the people rejoiced,6 and brought in, and cast into the chest, until they had made an end.

11 Now it came to pass, othat at what time the chest was brought unto the king's office by the hand of the Levites, and when they saw that there was much money, the king's scribe and the high priest's officer came and emptied the chest, and took it, and carried it to his place again. Thus they did day by day, and gathered money in abundance.

12 And the king and Jehoiada gave it to such as did the work of the service of the house of the Lord, and hired pmasons and carpenters to repair the house of the Lord, and also such as wrought iron and brass to mend the house of the Lord.

13 So the workmen wrought, and the work was perfected by them, and they set the house of God in his state, and strengthened it.7

14 And when they had finished it, they brought the rest of the money before the king and Jehoiada, whereof were made vessels for the house of the Lord, even vessels to minister, and to offer withal, and spoons, and vessels of gold and silver: and they offered burnt-offerings in the house of the LORD continually all the days of Jehoiada.

15 ¶ But Jehoiada waxed old, and was full of days when he died; an hundred and thirty years old was he when he died.9

16 And they buried him "in the city of David¹ among the kings, *because he had done good in Israel, both toward God, and toward his house.2

17 ¶ Now, vafter the death of Jehoiada came the princes of Judah, and made obeisance to the king:3 then the king hearkened unto them.

CHAPTER XXIV. [Ver. 18. Jehoiada was gone. The weak-minded king now felt the want of an upright, determined, and God-fearing counsellor. Joash was bound as a king not merely to serve God himself, but to exercise his legitimate influence, and use his rightful power, to maintain the worship of Jehovah in the land. His weakness, his failure to do his duty faithfully and fearlessly in this respect, brought the wrath of God both upon him and upon his kingdom.

Ver 24. [In 2 Ki. 12. 17, 18 we are told that Hazael, king of Syria, invaded Philistia, and after capturing Gath, was marching on Jerusalem when he was bought off by Joash, who gave him all the treasures of the temple. It is highly probable he returned again, defeated the army of Joash, and plundered the country. So, at least, I would conclude from the statement that he 'executed judgment against Joash.' P.]

REFLECTIONS. -It is a great advantage for young persons to be directed by those who are pious, prudent, and faithful. And the influence of education, the awe or example of friends, may often push those far into external appearances of religion who have no cordial regard to it: nay, in shows of devotion, empty hypocrites may outstrip real and noted saints. How many useful works in church and state would be utterly stopped, if God did not raise up a few active men to carry them forward! But it is an honour to do good in our time by promoting religion; and faithfulness is the great honour, and will be the lasting comfort, of such as are intrusted with public money, or employed in public business. The godly are often honourably interred with an appearance of distinguished respect and grief, and yet their example quickly disregarded. Pretended conversions, and hypocritical strictness, soon issue in fearful apostasy. Many conform to religion

TOMBS OF ZECHARIAH AND ST. JAMES. [II. Chron., xxiv:20, 21.]—"And the Spirit of God came upon Zechariah the son of Jehoiada the priest, which stood above the people, and said unto them, Thus saith God, Why transgress ye the commandments of the Lord, that ye cannot prosper? because ye have forsaken the Lord. He hath also forsaken you. And they conspired against him and stoned him with stones at the commandment of the king in the court of the house of the Lord." According to the traditions of the Jews, this tomb stands for Zechariah who was stoned in the reign of Joash. It is a cubical, monolithic structure excavated from the natural rock. Christians look upon the tomb as standing for the Zacharias spoken of by our Lord in Saint Matthew, xxiii:35. The tomb of Saint James is for the apostle by that name who was hurled to death in the valley below the tomb. This tomb is also an excavated chamber in the side of the cliff, having in front a porch supported by two columns and two half columns. The porch is eighteen feet wide by nine feet deep, and is approached by a door and staircase on the north side.

18 And they left the house of the LORD God of their fathers, and served groves and idols: and wrath came upon Judah and Jerusalem for this their trespass.

19 Yet he sent prophets to them, to bring them again unto the LORD; and they testified against them:4 but they would not give ear.

20 And the Spirit of God came upon⁵ Zechariah the son of Jehoiada the priest, which stood above the people, and said unto them, Thus^b saith God, Why transgress ye the commandments of the Lord, that ye cannot prosper? because ye have forsaken the Lord, he hath also forsaken you.

ness of the burdens laid upon him, and the qrepairing of the house of God, behold, they are written in the story of the book of the kings: and Amaziah his son reigned in his stead.

CHAPTER XXV.

1 Amaziah beginnth to reign well. 3 He executeth justice on the murderers of his jather. 5 Having hired an army of Israelites against the Edomites, at the word of a prophet he loseth an hundred tidents, and dismisseth them. 11 He overthroweth the Edomites. 10, 13 The home. 14 Amaziah, proud of his victory, serveth the gods or Edom, and despiseth the admonitions of the prophet. 17 He provoketh Joseph to his overthrow. 25 His reign. 27 He is slain by a conspiracy at Lachish.

MAZIAH was twenty and five years old A when he began to reign; and he reigned twenty and nine years in Jerusalem: and his mother's name was Jehoaddan of Jerusalem.

2 And he did bthat which was right in the sight of the Lord, but not with a perfect heart.

3 ¶ Now it came to pass, when the kingdom was established to him,2 that he slew his servants that had killed the king his father:

4 But he slew not their children, but did as it is written in the law in the book of Moses, where the Lord commanded, saying, aThe fathers shall not die for the children, neither shall the children die for the fathers, but every man shall die for his own sin.

5 ¶ Moreover, Amaziah gathered Judah together, and made them captains over thousands, and captains over hundreds, according to the houses of their fathers, throughout fall Judah and Benjamin: and he numbered them from stwenty years old and above, and found them three hundred thousand's choice men, able to go forth to war, that could handle spear and shield.

6 He hired also an hundred thousand mighty men of valour out of Israel for an Lundred talents4 of silver.5

7 But there came ha man of God to him, saying, O king, let not the army of Israel go with thee: for the Lord is not with Israel, to wit, with all the children of Ephraim.

8 But if thou wilt go, 'do it, be strong for the battle;6 God shall make thee fall before the enemy: 1 for God hath power to help, and to cast down.

9 And Amaziah said to the man of God, when it is fashionable, who are glad of an opportunity to throw off the restraint. What an unspeakable loss to a church or nation is the death of a pious or faithful counsellor! and what a plague are complaisant and wicked flatterers! But in times of great degeneracy, God never wants some faithful witnesses, that they who hate to be reformed may be left without excuse: and great zeal for God is then needful, to oppose the torrent of ungodliness, and to render ministers duly torrent of ungodliness, and to render ministers duly faithful to souls: for ingratitude, injustice, and barbarity generally attend hatred of reproof and worshipping of idols. And God's prophets, if faithful, are sure to be marked with suffering or death: but quickly shall God resent the injuries done to them. Quickly, and in manifold forms, his judgment shall overtake the obstinate transgressors: and when he forsakes men they become an easy prev to every invader. Often he gives become an easy prey to every invader. Often he gives

CHAPTER XXV. REFLECTIONS. multitudes are mere dissemblers in their religious ap-For some carnal end they apply their tongue and hand to religion, while their heart hates it. But short-lived are the triumphs of murderers, particularly those of sovereigns. And strict equity ought to take place in the punishment of criminals, that the innocent may not be involved with the guilty. How fearfully sin diminishes and weakens nations! And rash undertakings, or alliances in war, make room for God is our enemy; and connection with his enemies but hastens the curse on our enterprises.

piety feel their pride hurt when treated as profane and wicked: and the proud, when baulked of their expected honours and booty, are greatly enraged. quests made by nations are often really to their own hurt: and those whom we imitated in wickedness become the instruments of our punishment. But hase is the cruelty, and sottish the folly, to dash idolaters to pieces, and preserve, nay, worship, the idols which could not protect their votaries from such barbarous severity. Wicked men heartily hate a faithful reprover: and much sooner will they part with large sums of money than with the most useless and despicable idol! But near and certain is their destrucdespicable idol! But near and certain is then destina-tion whom God has left off to reprove, and in whom pride swells to the brim. They that would not hearken to God's servants will soon hearken to their own wicked become an easy prey to every invader. Often ne gives men blood to drink who have imbrued their hands in the blood of his saints: while his justice pursues them into everlasting woe. And scarcely doth anything the wicked. Such as are really unconcerned about the wicked. Such as are really unconcerned about the wicked. Such as are really unconcerned about the wicked. They who go forth hastily to strive will

But what shall we do for the hundred talents which I have given to the army of Israel? And the man of God answered, The LORD is able^m to give thee much more than this.

10 Then Amaziah separated them, to wit, the army that was come to him out of Ephraim, to go home8 again: wherefore their nanger was greatly kindled against Judah, and they returned home oin great anger.

11 ¶ And Amaziah strengthened himself.¹ and led forth his people, and went to pthe valley of Salt, and smote of the children of Seir ten thousand.2

12 And other ten thousand left alive did the children of Judah carry away captive, and brought them unto the top of the rock, and cast them down from the top of the rock, that they all were qbroken in pieces.3

13 ¶ But the soldiers of the army which Amaziah sent back, that they should not go with him to battle, fell upon the cities of Judah, from 'Samaria even unto Beth-horon, and smote three thousand of them,⁵ and took much spoil.⁶

14 \(\text{Now it came to pass, after that Amaziah} \) was come from the slaughter of the Edomites, that he brought the gods of the children of Seir, and set them up to be his gods, and bowed down himself before them, and burnt incense unto them.

15 Wherefore the anger of the LORD was kindled against Amaziah, and he sent unto him at prophet, which said unto him, Why hast thou sought after the gods of the people, "which could not deliver their own people out of thine hand?

16 And it came to pass, as he talked with him, that the king said unto him, Art thou made of the king's counsel? "forbear; why shouldest thou be smitten? Then the prophet forbare, and said, I know that "God hath determined, to destroy thee, because thou hast done this, and hast not hearkened unto my

22 And Judah was put to the hworse before Israel, and they fled every man to his tent.

23 And Joash the king of Israel took Amaziah king of Judah, the son of Joash, the son of Jehoahaz, at Beth-shemesh, and brought him to Jerusalem, and brake down the wall of Jerusalem from the gate of Ephraim to the corner-gate,4 four hundred cubits.

24 And he took all the gold, and the silver, and all the vessels that were found in the house of God with Obed-edom, and the treasures of the king's house, the 5hostages6 also, and returned to Samaria.

25 ¶ And Amaziah the son of Joash king of Judah lived after the death of Joash son of Jehoahaz king of Israel fifteen years.

26 Now the "rest of the acts of Amaziah, first and last, behold, are they not written in the book of the Kings of Judah and Israel?

Talmud Gur-baal was identical with Gerar, an old city on the southern border of Philistia. This however is doubtful. The Mehunims, or more properly Maonites, were an ancient nomad tribe allied to the Phœnicians, whose earliest settlements were in the vale of Sodom. 18 And they withstood Uzziah the king. and said unto him, *It appertaineth not unto thee, Uzziah, to burn incense unto the Lord, but to the priests the sons of Aaron, that are consecrated to burn incense: go out of the sanctuary; for thou hast trespassed; neither shall it be afor thine honour from the Lord God.

19 Then Uzziah was bwroth, and had a censer in his hand to burn incense; and, while he was wroth with the priests, the eleprosy even rose up in his forehead⁵ before the priests in the house of the Lord, from beside the incensealtar.

20 And Azariah the chief priest, and all the priests, looked upon him, and, behold, he was dleprous in his forehead, and they thrust him out from thence; yea, himself 'hasted also to go out, because the Lord had smitten him.

21 And Uzziah the king was a leper unto the day of his death, and dwelt in a several house, being a leper; for he was cut off from the house of the LORD: and Jotham his son was over the king's house, judging the people of the land.

22 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Uzziah, first and last, did Isaiah the prophet, the son of Amoz, write.

23 So Uzziah *slept with his fathers, and they buried him with his fathers in the field of the burial which belonged to the kings; for they said, He is a leper: and Jotham his son reigned in his stead.

From these, as a leper, Uzziah was excluded, and buried without in the adjoining field. C.—The real tombs of the kings must have been in the city of David, i.e. on Mount Zion; and could not therefore be those above mentioned. Tradition points out to this day the tomb of David on the summit of Zion, just outside the modern Zion Gate of Jerusalem. A large building, containing a mosque and a Christian church, stands on the spot, but the sepulchres are beneath, hewn in the rock. The fanaticism of the Mohammedans has hitherto prevented a full examination of them. They may contain some important relics. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—A godly, faithful, and prudent

instructor is a great advantage to a youthful king: and a noted regard to the laws and worship of God lays an excellent foundation for prosperity: for God honours those that honour him: and as long as we cleave to him, he will be our assistant. And what extensive capacities God gives some men, that they can take care of a multitude of things at once? But how bewitching is pride! it can decoy men to their ruin in a thousand And it is difficult to be prosperous and yet be humble. But seldom do men gratify their pride without bringing themselves to deserved shame. The offices and ordinances of God's church are sacred and appropriate: it is at our highest peril if we interfere with them without his call. And when God's ministers magnify their office, and boldly withstand the sinful attempts of the greatest monarchs, it is honourable and But how impatient are the proud of faithbecoming. But how impatient are the proud of faithful reproof or zealous opposition! The most wise and just rebuke exasperates the wilful. And they who will not submit to admonition rush on their own ruin. God marks them with disgraceful punishments, answerable to their crimes. And when we feel his displeasure, it is madness to persist. Humiliation is our only door of escape. And sometimes when sins are pardoned of God, they leave an indelible stain among men.

And the children of Ammon gave him the same year an hundred talents of silver,4 and ten thousand measures of wheat, and ten thousand of barley. So much did the children of Ammon pay unto him, both the second year and the third.

6 So Jotham became mighty, because The prepared his ways before the LORD his God.

Often the very persons or nations whom we have made our pattern in wickedness, are made the instruments of our punishment. dreadfully are the mightiest numbered to the slaughter when the Lord fighteth against them. But how tender his compassion towards his offending people, even while he smites them! He observes and is provoked with those who inhumanly murder or abuse them, especially if they be brethren, or act from principles of hatred or revenge. And he constantly seeks by his word and spirit to render their most outrageous enemies kind and generous to them. They who are made sensible of their own sins will sympathize with their brethren's sufferings. It is better to take warning late than never: and the victory of self-denial is more glorious than the necks of vanquished enemies. It is the greatest honour to the mighty to be merciful. But OFFEE GARDEN, DUMMAR, DAMASCUS—TO WHOSE GODS AHAZ, THE KING OF JUDAH, SACRIFICED, AND BROUGHT RUIN TO HIS HOME AND PEOPLE. [II. he had seen in Damascus. He is said to have introduced the sun dial, which is about the only useful thing he contributed to his time. We give a picture above of a coffee garden in one of the suburbs of Damascus. This city was, perhaps, in the days of Ahaz, very much what it is to-day. It owes its existence to the Abana river, and has always been noted for its beautiful gardens filled with flowering shrubs. Damascus has always been a wicked city. People here have lived for pleasure, and the gods of Damascus to which Ahaz sacrificed were the ruin of him and of his people.

CHAPTER XXIX.

1 Hezekiah's good reign. 3 He restoreth religion. 5 He exhorteth the Levites to cleause the house of God. 12 They sanctify themselves, and cleause the house of God. 20 Hezekiah offereth solemn sacrifices, wherein the Levites were more forward than the priests.

EZEKIAH begana to reign when he was If five and twenty years old; and he reigned nine and twenty years in Jerusalem: and his mother's name was Abijah, the daughter of Zechariah.2

2 And he 'did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, according to all that David his father had done.

3 ¶ He, in the direct year of his reign, in the first month, opened the doors of the house of the Lorn, and repaired them.4

4 And he brought in the priests and the Levites, and gathered them together into the east street.

5 And said unto them, Hear me, ye Levites; Sanctify now yourselves, and sanctify the house of the LORD God of your fathers, and carry forth "the filthiness out of the holy place."

6 For hour fathers have trespassed, and done that which was evil in the eyes of the Lord our God, and have forsaken him, and have turned away their faces from the habitation of the LORD, and turned their backs.6

7 Also they have shut up the doors of the porch, and put out the lamps, and have not burnt incense nor offered burnt-offerings in the holy place unto the God of Israel.

8 Wherefore the kwrath of the Lord was upon Judah and Jerusalem, and he hath delivered them to trouble, to astonishment, and to hissing, as ye see with your eyes.

9 For, lo, four fathers have fallen by the sword, and our sons, and our daughters, and our wives, are in captivity for this.7

10 Now it is "in mine heart to make a covenant with the LORD God of Israel, that his fierce wrath may turn away from us.

11 My sons, 8 ben not now negligent: for the Lord hath chosen you to stand before him, when God lays aside one instrument of correction, he often takes another in his hand; and turns the helps which we sinfully secure into ruinous plagues. When we forsake God, we must needs be disappointed in every other confidence. And desperately hardened must men be when both mercies and judgments render them worse and worse. Happy is that nation where their tyrannical monsters of wickedness are quickly cut off by death, to make way for better princes.

CHAPTER XXIX. REFLECTIONS. -- What

duce in a nation! And great is the mercy when God gives good men power after they have long been unwilling spectators of wickedness. It is highly honourable when those in high stations give to the Lord the first beginnings of their power and influence. And when God gives opportunity, with earnestness, humble grief, and holy zeal, should men reform their neglects and turn to the Lord. Corrupters of religion often leave the church and ordinances of God in the greatest confusion. And it is necessary to ponder the punishments of former sins in order to render us hearty and strange alterations the change of a sovereign may pro- active in our reformation. And much may be done in a short time if all concerned be diligent. are those ministers whom God stirs up to be leaders in the work of reformation, to provoke their brethren to jealousy: and glorious is the sight when they cheerfully work to one another's hands in reforming the church —when kings, princes, priests, and people vie with one another in improving Jesus Christ as the great pro-pitiation for sins, and in serious repentance of former sins, and returning to the observance of all God's ordinances, grudging neither cost nor care! They will then find their work much more easy than they expected. But, alas! that priests, who ought to be

It is never too late for sinners to return while the calls of mercy are continued: and it is only impenitence persisted in that becomes fatal. If we do all that we can to encourage them, their blood must be on their own heads if they obstinately refuse. Better that our invitations should be derided than that God should be dishonoured, and one sould murdered by our sloth. And though favour sound nurdered by our sloth. 1 Hezekiah proclaimeth a solemn passover on the second month for Judah and Israel. 13 The assembly, having destroyed the altars of idolatry in Jerusalem, keep the feast fourteen days. 27 The priests and Levites bless the people.

ND Hezekiah sent to all Israel and Judah. A and wrote letters also to Ephraim and Manasseh, that they should come to the house of the Lord at Jerusalem, to keep the passover unto the Lord God of Israel.

2 For the king had dtaken counsel, and his princes, and all the congregation in Jerusalem, to keep the passover in the second month.2

10 So the posts passed from city to city through the country of Ephraim and Manasseh even unto Zebulun: but they 'laughed them to scorn, and mocked them.

11 Nevertheless 'divers of Asher, and Manasseh, and of Zebulun, humbled 9themselves, and came to Jerusalem.

12 Also in Judah the thand of God was to give them one heart to do the commandment of the king and of the princes, by the word of the Lord.

13 ¶ And there assembled at Jerusalem much people to keep the feast of unleavened bread "in the second month, a very great congregation.

14 And they arose, and took away the "altars that were in Jerusalem, and all the altars for incense took they away, and cast them into the brook Kidron.

15 Then they killed the passover on the fourteenth day of the second month: and the priests and the Levites were ashamed,2 and sanctified themselves, and brought in the burntofferings into the house of the LORD.

16 And they stood in their place⁸ after their manner, according to the law of Moses the man of God: the priests sprinkled the blood, which they received of the hand of the Levites.

17 For there were many in the congregation that were not sanctified: therefore "the Levites had the charge of the killing of the passovers for every one that was not clean, to sanctify them unto the Lord.4

18 For a multitude of the people, even many of Ephraim, and Manasseh, Issachar, and Zebulun, bhad not cleansed themselves, yet did they eat the passover otherwise than it was written: but Hezekiah prayed for them, saying, The good Lord pardon every one and the Levites and the priests praised the LORD day by day, singing with loud instruments' unto the LORD.

- 22 And Hezekiah spake ⁱcomfortably unto all the Levites that taught the *good knowledge of the Lord: and they did eat throughout the feast seven days, offering peace-offerings, and making confession to the Lord God of their fathers.

- 24 For Hezekiah king of Judah *did give to the congregation a thousand bullocks, and seven thousand sheep; and the princes gave to the congregation a thousand bullocks, and ten thousand sheep: and oa great number of priests sanctified themselves.
- 25 And all the congregation of Judah, with the priests and the Levites, and all the congregation that came out of Israel, and the strangers, that came out of the land of Israel, and that dwelt in Judah, rejoiced.
- 26 So there was great joy in Jerusalem: for since the qtime of Solomon, the son of David king of Israel, there was not the like in Jerusalem.1
- 27 ¶ Then the priests the Levites arose and blessed the people: and their voice was heard, and their prayer came up to his holy dwellingplace, even unto heaven.

4 Moreover he commanded the people that dwelt in Jerusalem to give 'the portion of the priests and the Levites, that they might be encouraged in the law of the LORD.

5 ¶ And as soon as the commandment came abroad,7 the children of Israel 1 brought in abundance8 the first-fruits of corn, wine, and oil, and honey,9 and of all the increase of the field; and the tithe of all things brought they in abundantly.

6 And concerning the children of Israel and Judah, that dwelt in the cities of Judah, they also brought in the tithe of oxen and sheep, and the stithe of holy things, which were consecrated unto the LORD their God, and laid them by heaps.

7 In the 'third' month they began to lay the foundation of the heaps, and finished them in the seventh2 month.3

8 And when Hezekiah and the princes came and saw the heaps, they blessed the LORD, and his people Israel.

9 Then Hezekiah questioned with the priests and the Levites concerning the heaps.

10 And Azariah the chief priest of the house of Zadok answered him, and said, "Since the people began to bring the offerings into the house of the Lord, we have had enough to eat. and have left plenty:4 for the Lord hath blessed his people; and that which is left is this great store.5

11 \P Then Hezekiah commanded to prepare chambers6 in the house of the LORD; and they prepared them,

12 And brought in the offerings, and the tithes, and the dedicated things, faithfully: over which Cononiah the Levite was ruler, and Shimei his brother was the next.

13 And Jehiel, and Azaziah, and Nahath, and Asahel, and Jerimoth, and Jozabad, and Eliel, and Ismachiah, and Mahath, and Benaiah, were overseers, under the hand of Cononiah, and Shimei his brother, at the commandment of Hezekiah the king, and Azariah the ruler of the house of God.

14 And Kore the son of Imnah the Levite, othe porter toward the east, was over the freewill-offerings of God, to distribute the oblations of the Lord, and the pmost holy things.

15 And next him8 were Eden, and Miniamin, and Jeshua, and Shemaiah, Amariah, and Shecaniah, in the ecities of the priests, in their set office,9 to give to their brethren by courses, as well to the great as to the small;

20 ¶ And thus did Hezekiah throughout all Judah, and "wrought that which was good, and right, and truth, before the LORD his God.

21 And in every work that he began in the service of the house of God, and in the law, and in the commandments, to seek his God, he did it "with all his heart," and "prospered.

13 Know ye not what I and my fathers have done unto all the people of other lands? were the gods of the nations of those lands any ways able to deliver their lands out of mine hand?

14 Who was there among all the gods of those nations that my fathers utterly destroyed, that could deliver his people out of mine hand, that your God4 should be able to deliver you out of mine hand?

15 Now therefore "let not Hezekiah 5deceive you, nor persuade you on this manner, neither yet believe him: for no god of any nation or kingdom was able to deliver his people out of mine hand, and out of the hand of my fathers; how much less shall your God deliver you out of mine hand?

17 He *wrote also letters to rail on the

How comely is it when great men, by their generous present, encourage others to bestow their respective dues upon the service and servants of God! gospel ministry might be easily and comfortably maintained did every one concerned minister according to his ability. And with great care ought sacred revenues to be preserved and managed, that none of Jesus' servants, or their families, may lack what is necessary:

for it is scandalous that some should riot in luxury, while their brethren, more laborious and faithful, should But with great confidence may we expect that God will honour and succeed our religious endeavours when we engage in them with our whole heart.

CHAPTER XXXII. [Ver. 4. We may conclude from this passage, when taken in connection with ver. 30, and with the statements made in the apocryphal book of Ecclesiasticus, 48. 17, that there was a fountain called Gihon somewhere on the west of the city, whose waters originally flowed down the valley of Hinnom, 'through the midst of the land.' Nehemiah, 2. 13, speaks of the Dragon Well in the same direction, and this may have been another name for Gihon, have covered the fountains. Hezekiah seems to have covered the fountains by constructing subterranean chambers similar to those at the pools of Solomon, and then to have conducted the waters by hidden canals into the city. The work was evidently of great magnitude. Perhaps the Pool of Hezekiah, which deliver his people out of mine hand.

18 Then they "cried with a loud voice, in the Jews' speech, unto the people of Jerusalem that were on the wall, to affright them, and to trouble them; that they might take the city.

19 And they spake bagainst the God of Jerusalem, as against the gods or the people of the earth, which were the work of the hands of man.

20 Tard of this cause Hezekiah the king and the prophet Isaiah the son of Amoz, prayed and cried to heaven.

21 And the Lord sent an angel, which cut off all the mighty men of valour, and the leaders and captains in the camp of the king of Assyria: so he returned with shame of face to his own bowels slew him? there with the sword.

22 Thus the Lord saved Hezekiah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem from the hand of Sennacherib the king of Assyria, and from the hand of all other, and guided them on every side.

23 And many brought gifts unto the Lord to Jerusalem, and presents to Hezekiah king of Judah: so that he was magnified in the sight of all nations from thenceforth.

24 Tinh those days Hezekiah was sick to the death, and prayed unto the Lord: and he leaders, and prayed unto the Lord: and he leaders, and prayed unto the Lord: and he leaders, and prayed unto the Lord: and he leaders and captains in the camp of the king of Assyria.

35 and so the leaders are an angel, and the leaders are an angel, and the leaders and captains in the camp of the king of Assyria.

26 Thus the Lord saved Hezekiah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem from the hand of Sennacherib the king of Assyria, and from the hand of all other, and prought gifts unto the Lord the prophet is an angel with the sight of all nations from the necessary and the prophet is an angel with the sight of all nations from the necessary and the prophet is an angel with the sight of all nations from the necessary and the prophet is an angel with the sight of all nations from the necessary and the prophet is an angel with the sight of the sight of

The pride of his own children is especially odious and provoking to him; and it becomes us carefully to guard against and heartily to hate it. Astonishing is the wisdom of God, that can make sins, as well as sufferings, the means of his people's trial and blasphemy, let us give ourselves to mourning and prayer: so shall the issue be terrible to them, and humiliation. The same pool is referred to also in II. At the bottom is natural rock, which is leveled and covered with cement, and it is furnished with water by a small aqueduct from Birket Mamila. Dr. Thomson says the water which fills the pool is still brought by an underground conduit from what is supposed to be the upper Gihon.

CHAPTER XXXIII. REFLECTIONS.—What a grief it would be to many godly parents to return from death and behold the abominations of their children! Nations and churches readily relapse into their wonted abominations, from which they had been reformed with infinite pains. They become inhuman, unnatural, and infatuated when God gives them over to their own hearts' lusts. They turn from and provoke God, their best friend, and depend on Satan, their worst enemy. How quickly Hezekiah's boasted treasures are carried to Babylon, and his son to attend them! But O the mercy of God, in giving repeated warnings to the most vile and obstinate sinners; or in afflicting them, in order to awaken them! convert and forgive the greatest monsters of wickedreas. But bitter are the griefs, and visible the fruits, of real repentance, particularly when the subjects were once remarkably wicked. What care to restore the worship of God which they have defaced, and to reform the persons whom they have seduced! Though God their size behind his bealt they are respectively. cast their sin behind his back, they never forget it themselves, nor think themselves worthy of ordinary honours, whether in life or in death. And it may be useful for us to remember that our sins, with their aggravating circumstances, as well as our returns to our duty, are exactly marked in the registers of heaven. But with what a dreadful career and unremitting obunremitting ob-al ruin! They stinacy do some men post to eternal ruin! They greedily copy their parents' wickedness, but never their repentance

7 And Josiah gave to the people, of the flock, lambs and kids, all for the passoverofferings, for all that were present, to the number of thirty thousand,7 and three thousand bullocks: these were of the king's substance.

8 And his princes gave willingly unto the people, to the priests, and to the Levites: Hilkiah, and Zechariah, and Jehiel, rulers of the house of God, gave unto the priests, for the passover-offerings, two thousand and six hundred small cattle, and three hundred oxen.

9 Conaniah also, and Shemaiah and Nethaneel, his brethren, and Hashabiah, and Jeiel, and Jozabad, chief of the Levites, agave unto the Levites, for passover-offerings, five thousand small cattle, and five hundred oxen.

10 So the service was prepared, and the priests stood in their place, and the Levites in their courses, according to the king's commandment.

11 And they killed the passover,9 and the priests *sprinkled the blood from their hands, and the Levites 'flayed them.

12 And they "removed the burnt-offerings, that they might give according to the divisions of the *families of the people, to offer unto the Lord, as it is written in the book of Moses: and so did they with the oxen.

13 And they roested the passover with fire, according to the ordinance: but the other holy offerings sod they in pots, and in caldrons, and in pans, and pdivided them speedily among all the people.

14 And afterward they made ready for themselves, and for the priests: because the priests the sons of Aaron were busied in offering of burnt-offerings and the fat2 until night; therefore the Levites prepared for themselves, and for the priests the sons of Aaron.

15 And the singers, the sons of Asaph, were in their place, according to the commandment of David, and Asaph, and Heman, and Jeduthun the king's seer; and the porters waited his nation; trembles at the words of the God of Israel; and under the apprehensions of his denour ed wrath humbles himself; and labours to have all his subjects taght divine truths, fixed in them, and preserved from wickedness. And it is pleasant, after great prevailing impiety, to behold kings, ministers, and people harmoniously and heartily zealous for the instituted purity of God's worship, and solemnly devoting themselves, upon a new-covenant toomig, to his service.

CHAPTER XXXV. REFLECTIONS.-Alas! how often neither ministers nor people show due forwardness in observing the solemn ordinances of God! Yet much might be done for the excitement of others by one in high station, who so loves him that he grudges no expense nor labour in his service. And magistrates, by their example and zealous exertions, might effectually instigate and encourage even minis-in the way. No one ought to become a hypocrite for in the way. No one ought to become a hypocrite for the sake of carnal advantage: but certainly such as appear sincere ought to meet with peculiar encouragement. Care should be taken, by all concerned, that none be deprived of God's ordinances on account of their poverty; and that none, by public service, injure his own soul's edification. But great labour and pains are necessary in reducing all ranks and things to due ters to do their duty; yea, where many difficulties are order in the observation of God's ordinances after they

16 So all the service of the Lord was prepared the same day, to keep the passover, and to offer burnt-offerings upon the altar of the Lord, according to the commandment of king Josiah.

17 And the children of Israel, that were present kept the passover at that time, and the feast of unleavened bread seven days.

18 And there was no passover like to that? kept in Israel from the days of Samuel the prophet; neither did all the kings of Israel keep such a passover as Josiah kept, and the priests, and the Levites, and all Judah and Israel that were present, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

19 In the eighteenth year of the reign of Josiah was this passover kept.

20 After all this, when Josiah had prepared the temple, Necho king of Egypt came up to fight against Carchemish by Euphrates: and Josiah went out against him.

The siege lasted two years. It has been ever since regarded as the darkest period of Jewish history; and is still

It was built as a harem for the great Egyptian Pasha who assisted DeLesseps in opening the Suez canal, and who brought such a load of debt upon Egypt that he was deposed by the Sultan and taken to Constantinople. This building was confiscated by the government and is now used to house the valuable collection of Egyptian antiquities which make up the marvelous contents of the museum.

The proclamation of Cyrus referred to above had reference to building the Lord's nouse at Jerusalem. This is the Cyrus that captured Sardis, the capital of the kingdom of Lydia. Croesus was king at the time. Cyrus condemned him to be burned alive. When bound to the stake Croesus was heard to utter the name of Solon. Whereupon Cyrus inquired the reason. The unfortunate monarch replied by repeating a conversation which had taken place between himself and the Grecian sage on the instability of human happiness, which so affected Cyrus that he liberated Croesus, and ever after retained him as one of his most intimate friends.

We read in 2 Ki. 24. 13 that when in the reign of Jehoiachin Nebuchadnezzar captured Jerusalem, 'he carried out all the treasures of the house of the Lord, and the treasures of the king's house, and cut in pieces all the vessels of gold which Solomon king of Israel had made in the temple of the Lord;' yet Ezra says in this place that Cyrus returned the vessels. There is no contradiction. Nebuchadnezzar captured Jerusalem twice, once in the reign of Jehoiakim, and once in the reign of Jehoiachin. On the former occasion he took the golden vessels of the temple and placed them in the temple of his god at Babylon, 2 Ch. 36. 7; Da. I. 2. These vessels Cyrus delivered up again to the Jews when returning from exile. On the second capture of Jerusalem Nebuchad-nezzar appears to have stripped the gold plating from the larger vessels and furniture of the temple—from the altar of incense, the table of show-bread, the ark of the covenant, &c., he cut it in pieces and carried it away.

REFLECTIONS .- Behold how God rules over the kingdoms of the earth, and always seeks to turn the hearts of princes and others for the good of his church! God is here exactly fulfilling the predictions of his word concerning the name of the deliverer; and the occasion, time, and manner of the deliverance. It is honourable for princes and men in authority to begin the exercise of their power in the service of God, as an acknowledgment of his bounty to them; and to overlook secular interests and customs of countries in order to put honour on Christ and his people. But in every good word and work the Lord must work in us to will and to do of his good pleasure. And he can procure

And it is honourable when princes and ministers are peculiarly forward to rebuild God's temple and reform his church.

REFLECTIONS.—Great is the honour God puts upon those who prefer his glory and the interests of his church to their own ease! And great are the privileges which those obtain who are enrolled in the Lamb's to sin, Satan, and the world! What care God took to keep clear the genealogies of his ancient people, till his Son was thereby manifested to spring of Judah and David! It is reasonable that those be excluded from office in the church who undervalue that honour, and want proper tokens of their spiritual birth. And there is need always to consult God himself in everything relating to his worship and service. small and poor company had sin reduced the once numerous and wealthy tribes of Judah and Benjamin,

But was not this release and return of the Jews typical of the gathering of the nations to Christ, and of the church's deliverance from Antichrist, and the saints' release from death at the last day? Awakened and encouraged by the joyful sound of the gosper trumper, what multitudes, in the apostolic and after ages, did, with mourning for sin, with hallelujahs of praise, and with the most cordial affection, join themselves to Christ and his church, to be built up a spiritual temple and meet habitation for God! With almighty power encouraged by the joyful sound of the gospel trumpet, and meet manuacion for God, the annual place and to Jesus did, and still does, go forth conquering and to conquer, and to overthrow our spiritual enemies who hold us in slavery; making us free indeed, and willing to do whatever tends to his honour. CHAPTER III. REFLECTIONS.-Let us learn to prefer the business of religion to our most pressing temporal affairs; and in the worship of God do what we can when we cannot do what we would. And let leaders in church and state be peculiarly active and zealous. Never should the fear of men hinder us from, but hasten us to, fellowship with God. The more enemies we have, the more need have we that God should befriend us. If we have been long secluded from the public or solemn ordinances of God, more readily should we improve opportunities when put into our hands; and by no means neglect the daily sacrifices of the closet and family. If God bring us out of the furnace of affliction our hearts should burn with love to him; and never should we grudge to spare from ourselves that we may have wherewith to honour him or to relieve his poor saints; always taking care to disoose of it to the best advantage. If a good work is to be done, let us set about it with all our might and without delay, be the difficulties ever so great. should we despise the day of small things, but encourage ourselves in the everlasting power and mercy of God; praising him for the beginnings of his returning mercy while we are in this world, where shouts of joy can scarcely be discerned from the groans of weeping, let us rejoice with them that rejoice, and weep with them that weep. 64

AFFA, FROM HOTEL WINDOW—TO JAFFA WAS BROUGHT CEDAR TREES FROM LEBANON FOR THE REBUILDING OF THE TEMPLE IN JERUSALEM, UNDER ZERUBABEL. [Ezra. iii:7.]—"They gave money also unto the masons, and to the carpenters; and meat, and drink, and oil, unto them of Tiden, and to them of Tyre, to bring cedar trees from Lebanon to the sea of Joppa, according to the grant that they had of Cyrus, king of Persia." When Soiomon originally built the temple, he had the assistance of Hiram, king of Tyre, who sent cedar from Lebanon by way of Joppa (Jaffa) to Jerusalem. So we find that when Zerubabel undertook the rebuilding of the temple, he had a grant from Cyrus, king of Persia, to bring cedar trees from Lebanon by way of Joppa to Jerusalem. We give an illustration of Jaffa from the hotel window. This city has a remarkable history. At different times it has been pagan, Jew, Moslem, Arab, Mameluke, and Christian. 12 Be it known unto the king, that the Jews which came up from thee to us are come unto Jerusalem, building othe rebellious and the bad city, and have pset up the walls thereof, and qjoined the foundations.

CHAPTER IV. REFLECTIONS.—God's temple can never be built but Satan and his agents will rage and do all that they can to oppose it: and none are ordinarily more bitter opposers than pretended and mongrel professors. They will turn themselves into every shape to vent their malice; and will not spare money, labour, or villany to accomplish their purpose. Pretences of friendship, bribing of counsellors, flattery of princes, and boastful threatenings and reproaches are their common methods of working. Saints had therefore need to avoid intimacy with them, and to encourage themselves in the Lord their God, and be strong in him and in the power of his might. It is common for the faithful followers of Christ to be re-It is proached as dangerous enemies to the state: and if once professors have done an ill thing, their successors in the church are sure to be upbraided with it, although they themselves should heartily condemn it. When princes desire occasions of stumbling the agents for hell will soon supply them therewith. And things the most false or improbable, are often readily believed by most against Christ and his church. Most kings neither can nor care to know the truth with respect to their religious subjects. To their great joy the attempts of persecutors are often successful for a time; and the friends of Christ and his truths are too easily checked in their reforming attempts.

CHAPTER V. REFLECTIONS.-It is highly desirable to have church and state concurring in the work of reformation: but the declaration of divine truths is always the principal mean. Faithful reprovers are profitable to obedient ears. When God then will they not pay toll, tribute, and custom, and so thou shalt endamage the revenue2 of the kings.

14 Now, because we have maintenance from the king's palace, and it was not meet for us to see the king's dishonour, therefore have we sent and certified the king,

15 That search may be made in the book of the records of thy fathers: so shalt thou find in the book of the records, and know that this city is a rebellious city, and hurtful unto kings and provinces, and that they have moved3 sedition within the same of old time; for which cause was this city destroyed.5

16 We certify the king, that if this city be builded again, and the walls thereof set up, by this means "thou shalt have no portion on this side the river.

17 \P Then sent the king an answer unto Rehum the chancellor, and to Shimshai the scribe, and to the rest of their *companions scribe, and to the rest of their *companions that dwell in Samaria, and unto the rest beyond the river, Peace, and at such a time.

18 The letter which ye sent unto us hath been plainly read before me.

19 And I commanded, and search hath been made, and it is found that this city of old time hath *made insurrection against kings, and that rebellion and sedition have been made therein.

20 There *have been mighty kings also over Jerusalem, which have ruled over all countries beyond the river; and tall tribute and the service serves the customer of the samarian nation still living in the case of the samarian nation still living in the countries the samarian nation still living in the case of the samarian nation still living in the samarian na

23 Now, when the copy of king Artaxerxes' letter was read before Rehum, and Shimshai the scribe, and their companions, they went up in haste to Jerusalem unto the Jews, and made them to cease "by force and power.

4 Then said we unto them after this manner, What are the names of the men that make this building ?4

5 But the 'eye of their God was upon the elders of the Jews, that they could not cause them to cease, till the matter came to Darius: and then they returned answer by letter concerning this matter.

9 Then asked we those elders, and said unto them thus, 'Who commanded you to build this house, and to make up these walls?

10 We asked their names also, to certify thee, that we might write the names of the men that were the chief of them.

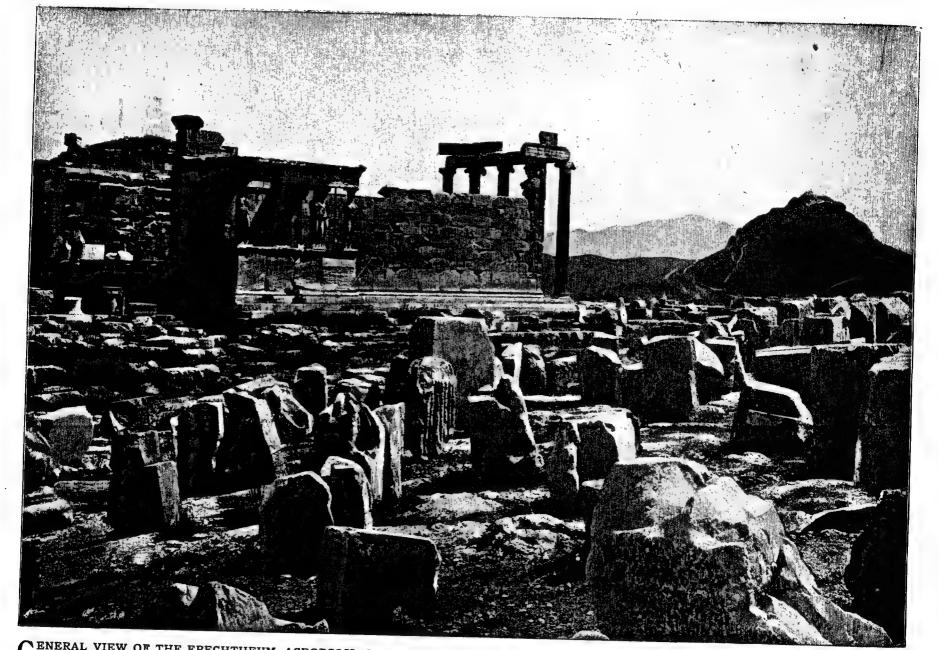

11 And thus they returned us answer, saying, We are the pservants of the God of heaven and earth, and build the house that was builded these many years ago, which a great king of Israel builded and set up.

12 But fafter that our fathers had provoked the God of heaven unto wrath, he gave them into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon, the Chaldean, who destroyed this house, and carried the people away into Baby-

In the rolls, where the king made a decree, and search was made in the house of the rolls, where the treasures were made up in Babylon." After the death of Cyrus, Cambyses was made king of Persia. He died of a small wound, and left no issue to succeed him, and his throne was usurped by Darius. Darius burnt Sardis, and thereby so enraged the Athenians that a war was kindled between Greece and Persia. Darius was then so exasperated against the Greeks that a servant every day, by his order, repeated these words: "Remember, O King, to punish the Athenians." He was conquered at the celebrated battle of Marathon by 10,000 Athenians. We give a picture of a general view of the Erechtheum on the Acropolis to illustrate these facts of Grecian history and the connection of Darius with it. It is an interesting fact that the Persians burned down the temple of Erechtheus that stood on this very spot. It was afterwards rebuilt in the time of Pericles.

15 And said unto him, Take these vessels, go, carry them into the temple that is in Jerusalem, and let the house of God be builded in his place.

16 Then came the same Sheshbazzar, and laid the foundation of the house of God which is in Jerusalem: and since that time even until now hath it been in building, and yet it is not finished.y.

17 Now therefore, if it seem good to the king, let "there be search made in the king's treasurehouse, which is there at Babylon, whether it be so, that a adecree was made of Cyrus the king to build this house of God at Jerusalem, and let the king send bhis pleasure to us concerning this matter.

CHAPTER VI.

1 Darius, finding the decree of Cyrus, maketh a new decree for the advancement of the building. 13 By the help of the enemies, and the directions of the prophets, the temple is finished. 16 The feast of the dedication is kept, 19 and the passover.

THEN Dariusa the king made a decree, and search was made in the house of the rolls,1 where the treasures were laid up2 in Babylon.

2 And there was found at Achmetha,3 in the palace that is in the province of the Medes, a roll, and therein was a record thus written:

3 In the bfirst year of Cyrus the king, the same Cyrus the king made a decree concerning the house of God at Jerusalem, Let the house be builded, the place where they offered sacrifices, and let the foundations thereof be strongly laid; the height thereof threescore cubits, and the breadth thereof threescore cubits;4

4 With athree rows of great stones, and a row of new timber; and elet the expenses be given out of the king's house:

5 And also let the golden and silver vessels of the house of God, which Nebuchadnezzar took forth out of the temple which is at Jerusalem, and brought unto Babylon, be restored, and brought5 again unto the temple which is at Jerusalem, every one to his place, and place them in the house of God.

6 Now therefore, Tatnai, governor beyond the river, Shethar-boznai, and your companions6 the Apharsachites, which are beyond the river, be ye far from thence:7

7 Let the work of this house of God alone; let the governor of the Jews and the elders of the Jews build this house of God in his place.

8 Moreover, I make a decree⁸ what ye shall do to the elders of these Jews for the building of this house of God: that hof the king's goods, even of the tribute beyond the river, forthwith expenses be given unto these men, that they be not 'hindered.

11 ¶ Now this is the copy of the letter that the king Artaxerxes gave unto Ezra the priest, the scribe, even a scribe of the words of the commandments of the Lord, and of his statutes to Israel.

12 Artaxerxes, "king of kings, unto "Ezra the priest, a scribe of the law of the God of heaven, perfect peace, and at such a time.

13 I make a decree, that 'all they of the people of Israel, and of his priests and Levites. in my realm, which are minded of their own free will to go up to Jerusalem, go with thee.

14 Forasmuch as thou art sent of the 7king. and of his pseven counsellors,8 to inquire concerning Judah and Jerusalem, according to the law of qthy God which is in thine hand;

15 And to carry the silver and gold, which the king and his counsellors have freely offered unto the God of Israel, whose habitation is in Jerusalem.

16 And all the silver and gold that thou canst find in all the province of Babylon, with the free-will-offering of the people, and of the priests, offering willingly for the house of their God which is in Jerusalem:

17 That "thou mayest buy speedily with this money bullocks, rams, lambs, with their meatofferings and their drink-offerings, and offer them upon the altar of the house of your God which is in Jerusalem.

18 And "whatsoever shall'seem good to thee, and to thy brethren, to do with the rest of the silver and the gold, that do after the will of your God.

19 The vessels also that are given thee for the service of the house of thy God, those deliver thou before the God of Jerusalem.

20 And whatsoever more shall be needful for the house of thy God, which thou shalt have occasion to bestow, bestow it out of the king's treasure-house.2

21 And I, even I Artaxerxes the king, do make a decree to all the treasurers which are of her advantage and honour. He raises up unex-pected instruments to accomplish his gracious purposes. And often his spiritual work is carried on by their means who have neither part nor lot in the matter. The prayers of the godly are, or ought to be, the great support of nations and their magistrates; and if magistrates understood their own interests they would carefully secure them in their favour. But dreadful is the curse which shall at last light upon all the enemies of Christ and his church. And it is high time to be active and bold in his work, when we are bound to it by his express command, shamed into it by repeated edicts of heathen magistrates, and encouraged in it by his faithful ministers. God will have his work finished at last, notwithstanding ten thousand obstructions. What a mercy is it when Christ's church is prepared for the exact observance of all his ordinances, the most solemn not excepted! And it is a matter of great joy to all his true friends, and an honour to a church, when ministers are remarkably holy and faithful. Yea, it is highly necessary that all of us solemnly dedicate our selves for temples to God; and offer up the solemn prayers of faith for God's blessing on the ordinances of his grace, which we have, or expect to enjoy. upon our services in his church must our hopes and joys depend, but on Jesus, as our God-honouring and sin-expiating oblation, and our passover sacrificed If we live on him as our all in all, and occupy ourselves diligently in his service, the Lord will provide friends for us, even where we least expected.

CHAPTER VII. [Ver. 1. Seraiah, the son of Azariah. This Seraiah was that high-priest who was slain by Nebuchadnezzar at Riblah, 2 Ki. 25, 18, 21, about 130 years before, and therefore could not be literally the father of Ezra. But by a principle of Jewish law, frequently exemplified in the Scriptures, when the intermediate parties died childless, and the family property or offices descended by heirship to a collateral branch, or in virtue of the law of adoption, as exemplified Ge. 48. 5, 6, a grandson or still more distant relative might be counted not as the son of his immediate father, but of his more remote ancestor. Among the many practical advantages of this system, was the facility which it afforded in tracing ancestry, and settling hereditary claims, by diminishing the links of proof necessary for their establishment. C.]

REFLECTIONS.—God richly endows men with proper gifts and grace when he intends them for distinguished work in his church. And that character is highly exalted in which great knowledge and activity meet with great holiness of heart and life. Yea, very meet with great holiness of heart and life. Yea, very excellent is a knowledge of the Scriptures when it is reduced to practice and employed in the instruction of If God calls us to a difficult service he can make all things concur to our encouragement. If his people want magistrates of their own religion, he can make heathens to compensate the loss, doing honour to his word as the rule; showing at once generous hearts and open hands, and punishing contemptuous despisers of him and his interests. But how thankful ought we to be when he thus makes the princes of this world nursing parents to his church, terrors to evildoers, and a praise to them that do well! Surely then it is becoming in us to depend on him alone as our strength and salvation, and to ascribe the glory of all

27 ¶ Blessed' be the Lord God of our fathers, which hath put such a thing as this in the king's heart, to beautify the house of the Lord which is in Jerusalem;

YCABETTUS AND THE PALACE OF THE KING, FROM ACROPOLIS—IN SIGHT OF PLACE WHERE AHASUERUS WAS DEFEATED IN THE BATTLE OF SALAMIS. [Ezra, viii:1.]—After the death of Darius, who was conquered by the Greeks in the battle of Marathon, Ahasuerus succeeded his father on the throne. Ahasuerus continued the warlike operations of his father, and invaded Greece, but was conquered at the battle of Salamis on the 20th of September, B. C. 480. There is a mount whose base is washed by the sea, called Kory-dallos, in sight of the Acropolis and Mt. Lycabettus which has long borne the name of the Throne of Xerxes (Ahasuerus) because it is said he sat upon the rocky brow of this hill in his silver-footed chair to watch the progress of the battle of Salamis. The Persian army was almost completely destroyed in this battle. Under the very eyes of Ahasuerus the Greeks destroyed the "bloom of all the Persian youth, in spirit the bravest, and in truth the CHAPTER X.

1 Shechaniah encourageth Ezra to reform the abuse of the strange marriages. 6 Ezra mourning assembleth the people. 9 The people at the exhortation of Ezra, repent, and promise amendment. 15 The care to perform it. 18 The names of those who had married strange

NOW when Ezra¹ hada prayed, and when he had confessed, weeping and casting himself down before the house of God, there assembled unto him out of Israel a very great congregation of men, and women, and children: for the people wept very sore.2

2 And Shechaniah the son of Jehiel, one of the sons of Elam, answered and said unto Ezra, ^aWe have trespassed against our God, and have taken strange wives of the people of the land: yet now there is hope in Israel concerning this thing.

3 Now therefore let us make a covenant with our God, to put away all the wives, and such as are born of them, according to the counsel of my lord, and of those that stremble at the commandment of our God; and let it be done according to the law.

4 Arise; for this matter belongeth unto thee: we also will be with thee: be of good courage, and do it.3

5 Then arose Ezra, and made the chief priests, the Levites, and all Israel, to *swear that they should do according to this word. And they sware.

6 Then Ezra rose up from before the house of God, and went into the chamber of Johanan the son of "Eliashib: and when he came thither, he *did eat no bread, nor drink water; for he mourned because of the transgression of them that had been carried away.

7 And they made proclamation throughout Judah and Jerusalem, unto all the children of the captivity, that they should gather themselves together unto Jerusalem:

8 And othat whosoever would not come within three days, according to the counsel of the princes and the elders, all his substance should be pforfeited,4 and himself separated from the congregation of those that had been carried away.

9 Then all the men of Judah and Benjamin gathered themselves together unto Jerusalem

And that which seems light or lawful to carnal pro-fessors lies heavy on tender consciences. These take grief and shame to themselves for such as are hardened in their sins: and to join with such in their sorrow and in their sins; and to join with such in their softow and zeal is both our duty and honour; for the most fearful aggravations appear attending our sins and those of our land when we consider the matter as in the sight of God. It therefore becomes us faithfully and humbly sacrifice, our great propitation; once offered in the evening, the end of the world; and in the believing view of God's sacrificial relation and pardoning mercy, to justify him and condemn ourselves. But often-repeated provocations weary out the patience of God. And hopeless is their case when neither corrections humble nor mercies constrain.

CHAPTER X. [Ver. 11. The original cause of the law against mixed marriages evidently was the tendency of such marriages to draw the people away from the worship of the true God. All the nations among which the Israelites were placed were idolaters. Not only was their worship irrational, and sometimes inhuman, but their morals were most impure. Had the Israelites been permitted freely to intermarry with them, the natural and speedy result must have been universal degeneracy and degradation. The priestnood especially, as being the instructors and guides of the nation, required to be kept pure and spotless. Hence the intense desire and strenuous effort of Ezra to reclaim the erring among them. P.]

Ver. 17. ['They made an end with all the men,' that is, they completed the investigation of all the cases, and determined what should be done in each case. Probably in most cases the wives conformed to Judaism, and separated entirely from their Gentile relatives; but wherever the wives proved ignorant or stubborn, the rulers insisted on their being divorced. It became therefore, in regard to each wife, a choice between her idolatry and her husband; and in regard to each husband between carnal appetite and religious principle. P.] Ver. 44. [All these had taken strange wives, and within three days: it was the ninth month,5 and the twentieth day of the month; and all the people sat in the street of the house of God, trembling because of this matter, and for the great rain.6

10 And Ezra the priest stood up, and said unto them, Ye have transgressed, and have taken strange wives, to increase the trespass of Israel.

11 Now therefore make confession unto the Lord God of your fathers, and "do his pleasure; and "separate yourselves from the people of the land, and from the strange wives.

12 Then all the congregation answered and said with a loud voice, As thou hast said, so must we do.

13 But the people are many, and it is a time of much rain, and we are not able to stand without,7 neither is this a work of one day or two: for we are many that have transgressed in this thing.8

14 Let now our rulers of all the congregation stand, and let all them which have taken strange wives in our cities come at appointed times, and with them the elders of every city, and the judges thereof, until the fierce wrath of our God for this matter be turned from us.9

15 ¶ Only Jonathan the son of Asahel, and Jahaziah the son of Tikvah, were employed1 about this matter: and Meshullam and Shabbethai the Levite helped them.

16 And the children of the captivity did so: and Ezra the priest, with certain chief of the fathers, after the house of their fathers, and all of them by their names, were separated, and sat down in the first day of the tenth month to examine the matter.

17 And they made an end with all the men that had taken strange wives by the first day of the first month.2

18 ¶ And among the sons of the priests there bwere found that had taken strange wives; namely, of the sons of Jeshua the son of Jozadak, and his brethren, Maaseiah, and Eliezer, and Jarib, and Gedaliah.

19 And they'dgave their hands' that they would put away their wives; and, being eguilty, they offered a ram of the flock for their trespass.4

some of them had wives by whom they had children The comparatively small number who had married idolatrous wives seems to intimate that the transgrestion was but of recent origin; and this view seems corroborated by the statement that 'some of them had wives by whom they had children.' This statement also evidences the strictness of the investigation and enforcement of the law. But was it not cruel thus to divorce husbands and wives? No. For God had not For God had not joined them, God had forbidden their union. It was no more cruel than to divorce a bigamist, whose marriage is rendered null and void by virtue of a previous contract. Besides, there is no reason to conclude these wives and children would be sent away portionless, the uncompromising purity of the divine law being always consistent with the dictates of mercy. Ex.xxi. C.]

REFLECTIONS.-Wherever sin is seen and felt there is no ground for despair: yea, there may be good hope, through grace, where there is a burden of the most aggravated guilt. In mournful circumstances we ought to observe what makes for us as well as what makes against us. And even weaker saints may be instructors to those who are far stronger in gifts and grace. Mourning and reforming sinners ought to be encouraged; and leaders in church or state ought to be most active in promoting reformation. Men's sins, with the aggravations and danger of them, ought to be closely laid home to their consciences; for none will part with them till they perceive that they are undone if they persevere therein. Great men ought to take the good advice of their inferiors. Critical causes Critical causes ought to be decided with great deliberation and caution; and reformations begun and carried on with much fasting, prayer, and solemn covenanting with God, pro mise good success. When we truly return to God he will return to us: he will at last pluck his people as brands out of the burning. They who have the cause of God at heart spare neither time nor pains to serve it. But how shameful is it to find priests, whose mar-riages were peculiarly restricted of God, ringleaders in unhallowed connections with heathen women! and yet it is highly commendable in them to prove at last patterns of repentance and reformation to others. Alas' that so few clergymen are disposed to imitate their example; but rather endeavouring by every possible shift to extenuate, excuse, or defend their own error and

It commences twelve years after the dissolution of the unhallowed marriages; and, including at least twelve years of historical account, reaches to about the hundred and fourth after the return from Babylon. tact, and courage. With the single exception of Ezra he conferred more signal benefits upon his country than any man of that age. He found the people oppressed, the country desolate, the walls of Jerusalem in ruins. He rebuilt the walls, and thus laid the foundation of national independence. By his vigilance and Nehemiah was a man distinguished for piety, energy, prudence he overcame the opposition of powerful thy sight, that thou wouldest send me unto Judah, unto the city-of my fathers' sepulchres, that I may build it.

- 6 And the king said unto me, (the queen also sitting by him,4) For how long shall thy journey be? and when wilt thou return? So it^m pleased the king to send me; and I "set him a time.
- 7 Moreover, I said unto the king, If it please the king, let oletters be given me to the governors beyond the river, that they may convey me over till I come into Judah;5

And the king granted me, according to the good hand of my God upon me.

9 Then I came to the governors beyond the river, and gave them the king's letters. (Now the king had sent tcaptains of the army and horsemen with me.)7

12 ¶ And I arose in the night, I and some few men with me; neither btold I any man what my God had put in my heart to do at Jerusalem. Is neither was there any beast with me, save the beast that I rode upon.

13 And I went out by night by the gate of the valley, even before the dragon-well, and to the dung-port, and viewed the walls of Jerusalem, which were broken down, and the gates thereof were consumed with fire.

14 Then I went on to the gate of the fountain, and to the king's pool: but there was no place for the beast that was under me to pass.

REFLECTIONS.—Sad defects still remain in the militant church. But whenever God has work to be done, he can easily find or qualify instruments for it. Lively saints may often be found where we could least j expect them-courts not excepted. And no dignity or distance can make such a one careless of the honour of the church of God. The poverty or persecution which discourages others awakens his zeal and concern. In seasons of public, or private distress, fasting and tears should accompany our prayers. It is a great relief for a sorrowful spirit to pour out its complaints into the bosom of a compassionate God. While we have a God in Christ to go to, our case is never desperate. And if he pour out upon us his Spirit of grace and supplication, he will certainly hear us. Let us then, with holy and believing awe of his greatness and grace, rest on the stability of his promise. And let candid con-fessions of our sins and unworthiness attend our supplications for mercy. It is infinitely encouraging to us that we have to deal with a God who is our own God; a God who has done great things for us, and has pledged his promise to do more. Let us therefore put our own, and the hearts of all connected with the wel-fare of Zion, into his hand.

CHAPTER II. REFLECTIONS.—Strong grief | What strong faith in God, zeal for his glory. bold can scarcely be concealed. And it becomes superior or others to observe the appearances of distress in those around them, and to sympathize with them in it. Even Jesus marks his people's groans, and puts their team into his bottle. There is therefore no reason either for fear or for shame when sorrow for sin and for the affliction of God's people burden our heart and sadden out countenance. Nothing is more comely than meek and humble answers when given by distressed minds to great men. And pious ejaculations to God are proper to be intermingled with all our important dealings. The prayer of faith is never in vain. God will afford us friends, and help us where we scarcely ever expected it. It is easy with him to render the greatest on earth friendly and helpful to his church in a time of need. But every ravour shown to the servants of God awaken the envy and rage of the wicked. They so heartily hate the cause of God that they are vexed exceedingly if any take it by the hand and zealously promote it, and are ready to attack them with every arrow of envenomed malice, derision, slander, and threatening

RAGON'S FOUNTAIN, JERUSALEM—WHERE NEHEMIAH WENT TO VIEW THE WALLS OF JERUSALEM. [Nehemiah, ii:13.]—"And I went out by night by the gate of the valley, even before the dragon well * * * and viewed the walls of Jerusalem, which were broken down, and the gates thereof were consumed with fire." In the center of the Ophel hill, in the Valley of Jehoshaphat, there is a fountain with an intermittent spring whose waters connect with the Pool of Siloam by a canal which runs through the hill. This fountain is called the Dragon's Well, because they have a tradition that a dragon swallows up the water when awake, the water rising again when he is asleep, and this waking and sleeping of the dragon causes the intermittent flow of the water. The water comes up in the bottom of a cave 25 feet deep excavated in the rock. By going down sixteen steps we reach a chamber 18 feet long by 10 feet wide and 10 feet high, its sides being built of old stones and its roof a pointed arch.

CHAP. V. a Job 24.12. Is. 5. 7. Ja. 5.4.

1 The cry of the wives, is exceedingly striking. While their husbands worked or watched on the walls, they had to provide at home, and therefore first and most deeply ielt that domestic calamity for a Job 24.12. Is. 5. 7.

13 ¶ Therefore qset I in the lower places behind the wall, and on the higher places, I even set the people after their families with their swords, their spears, and their bows.

14 And I looked, and rose up, and said unto the nobles, and to the rulers, and to the rest of the people, Be not ye afraid of them: remember the Lord, which is great and terrible, and "fight for your brethren, your sons, and your daughters, your wives, and your houses.

15 And it came to pass, when our enemies heard that it was known unto us, and God *had brought their counsel to nought, that we returned all of us to the wall, every one unto his work.

16 And it came to pass, from that time forth, that the half of my servants wrought in the work, and the other half of them held both the spears, the shields, and the bows, and the habergeons; and the rulers were behind all the house of Judah.

17 They which builded on the wall, and they that bare burdens, with those that laded, every one awith one of his hands wrought in the work, and with the other hand held a weapon.2

18 For the builders, every one had his sword girded by his side,3 and so builded: and he that sounded the trumpet was by me.

19 And I said unto the nobles, and to the rulers, and to the rest of the people, The work is great and large, and we are separated upon the wall, one far from another.

20 In what place therefore ye hear the sound of the trumpet, resort ye thither unto us: bour God shall fight for us.

21 So we claboured in the work: and half of them held the spears from the rising of the morning till the stars appeared.

22 Likewise at the same time said I unto the people, Let every one with his servant lodge within Jerusalem, that in the night they may be a guard to us, and labour on the day.

23 So neither aI, nor my brethren, nor my servants, nor the men of the guard which followed me, none of us put off our clothes, 'saving that every one put them off for washing.4

CHAPTER III. REFLECTIONS. - It is a hopeful appearance when ministers are most forward in every good word and work; and when they undertake go through their work with much solemn prayer and dependence on God. And it is very encouraging when multitudes of all ranks—tradesmen, ladies, nobles, and commons—unanimously concur, in promoting the work of the Lord in an orderly manner. But how work of the Lord in an orderly manner. But now honourable is it if, like the men of Jericho, Gibeon, Mizpah, Zanoah, and the commons of Tekoah. we breier the public interests to our own private concerns! CHAPTER IV. [Ver. 18. This verse is explantatory of ver. 17. Every workman, whether builder bands. P.]

When the work is the Lord's we cannot be too zealously affected; and every person, if he be but hearty, may do someand every person, it he be but nearly, may do something in it. None are so little as to be useless; and none are so high as to be above it. And it is highly disgraceful, even for the greatest, to shift or neglect what God calls them to do in his shurch.

REFLECTIONS. - God's faithful builders are sure to have a share of the world's ridicule and contempt; and one wicked man encourages another. But though scoffers make their bands strong, God will shortly cover them with shame and confusion. Let saints then never discompose their souls on account of the most bitter or insolent contempt: God observes it, and will quickly resent it. Let them in patience possess their souls, commit their way to God, and go on more briskly with their Christian work. God's blessing will more than compensate men's revilings. And much may be done in a little time if all be hearty in lending their assistance. What a pity then is it that the people of God should scarcely ever be as harmonious and active in the Lord's work as the wicked are in their opposition to it! Nay, his more active servants have often as much trouble with the fears of their friends as with the terrors of their enemies. And false friends are more dangerous than open enemies. But be the plots of enemies ever so well laid, or ever so secret, God can discover or defeat them. Let then his infinite power and unbounded goodness encourage us to go on with our work, notwithstanding all the craft and malice of our adversaries. In all our spiritual work, all our attempts of reformation, let us put on the whole armour of God, and watch and pray, that we enter not into temptation. Let us, in our respective stations, unanimously unite, with heart and hand, against the common enemy; and count neither ease nor life dear unto us, that we may finish our course with joy. Religion bids fair to prosper when the pro-fessors thereof make earnest work of it, and endure hardship as good soldiers of Jesus Christ.

CHAPTER V. [Ver. 2. The ground of complaint was this: The able-bodied men were kept at work on the walls. They received no pay, yet they had to provide food for themselves and families. They were the walls. obliged to buy, and to borrow the necessary money. Unscrupulous merchants and usurers took advantage of this, charged extravagant prices and exorbitant interest, so that many were obliged to mortgage their lands, and even give their children up to servitude. P.

REFLECTIONS.-Hard times and hard hearts when met together render the poor miserable in-deed. And it is cruel to take advantage of our brethren's distress, and to make their yoke heavier by usurious exactions. Alas! how we bring hardship and famine on ourselves by our sins, and then complain of it. Those who have great families and little substance must learn to live by faith on God's promise and providence. And those who have small families and much substance should make their abundance a supply for their neighbours' wants; for often poor housekeepers are in much greater straits than the most wretched vagrants. But what a scandal to our holy religion is a worldly-minded and niggardly professor! And deliberate and aggravated is that then which lies in retaining that which we have unjustly which hes in retaining that which we have unjusting gotten. There can be no uprightness towards God without restitution to the oppressed. It is proper that rulers show themselves angry at what is sinful, that their subjects may be deterred from it and excited to But reproofs ought to be given with great consideration and temper, lest otherwise they fail of their end. And warm and rough, though not furious, measures are to be taken with hardened and presumptuous transgressors. It is highly criminal to expose the people of God, and interests of religion, to the reproach of their enemies. And the strongest bonds are necessary to restrain worldlings from their covetous courses. But how scandalous is it for magistrates to enrich themselves, or indulge their servants, to the public hurt! Those, whether magistrates or others, in whose hearts the fear and love of God remarkably reign, will discover it by the exemplariness of their lives. In times cover it by the exemplariness of their lives. In times of public distress they will even remit what was their unquestionable due. But infallible are the gracious

But business of consequence ought always to be preferred to matters of civility and compliment. It is common for the church's enemies to pretend friendship in order to ruin her; and no less so

Yea, they shall see, to their grief, that he cares for his people, and that when he works none can hinder However great the opposition, and weak the instruments, he can speedily effect his work. And much good may be done in a short time if people are hearty in it, and have a good God and a pious man at the head of it. But a most dangerous plague are pre-tended and unfaithful ministers, treacherous magis-trates, and villanous professors. The treachery of pre-

God marks the iniquities of his enemies, and will turn their deeplaid schemes against his people to their own confusion. Nor shall those who have ensnared themselves by sinful connections, or who assist them in their purposes, long escape the judgment which lingereth not.

CHAPTER VII. REFLECTIONS. -The worship and service of God ought always to be preferred to our civil concerns, however important; and with priment. It is common for the church's enemies to pretend friendship in order to ruin her; and no less so to represent her faithful ministers and members as traitors to government. But no lies, or malevolent reports, should weaken our hands from the work of God. They who have almighty power engaged for the faithful ministers and members as traitors to government. But no lies, or malevolent reports, should weaken our hands from the work of God. They who have almighty power engaged for the faithful ministers and encouraged of God, escape being ensnared in their nets. ND all athe people gathered themselves A together as one man into the street that was before bthe water-gate; and they spake unto Ezra the escribe to bring the book of the law of Moses, which the LORD had commanded to Israel.1

2 And Ezra the priest brought the law before the congregation, both of men and women, and all that could hear with understanding,2 upon the first day of the seventh month.

3 And he 'read therein before the street that was before the water-gate⁸ from the morning4 until mid-day,5 before the men and the women, and those that could understand: and the 'ears of all the people were attentive unto the book of the law.

4 And Ezra the scribe stood upon a ⁶pulpit of wood,7 which they had made for the purpose; and beside him stood Mattithiah, and Shema, and Anaiah, and Urijah, and Hilkiah, and Maaseiah, on his right hand; and on his left

CHAPTER VIII. [Ver. 1. 'The book of the law of Moses' is a proper name, and was employed and understood by the Jews as definitely as we employ the name Pentateuch. It is interesting to observe, I. That the people all knew of the existence of such a book, and that they were acquainted with its general contents. 2. That they were aware that the book was in the possession of Ezra. It is in the highest degree probable that the book referred to was the original sutograph committed by Moses to the custody of the priests, and laid up beside the ark. P.]

REFLECTIONS .- Not strong walls, but knowledge of and obedience to God, are the great safety of cities and nations. Nothing is more necessary for the establishment or preservation of true religion than a diligent study and thorough acquaintance with the word of God. Men, women, and children ought to vie with each other in their study and knowledge of it. And it is a great pleasure to faithful preachers to have hearers who hunger and thirst after it. Not only ought God's word to be read, but also explained and enforced on the conscience. And solemn prayers and praises should be joined with every public religious instruction. Sermons bid fair for success when the hearers are solemnly attentive. Nor will those who relish the solemnly attentive. Nor will those who relish the word of God ever think the time long which is spent in hearing. Short sermons and soon-wearied hearers are sad tokens of cold and careless hearts. O what a happy presage it is when God's law cuts men's consciences to the quick, and makes them weep from the heart! Penitent mourning makes way for sp mirth. They who sow in tears shall reap in joy. Penitent mourning makes way for spiritual it is the pleasantest part of a minister's work to comhand, Pedaiah, and Mishael, and Malchiah, and Hashum, and Hashbadana, Zechariah, and Meshullam.

5 And Ezra lopened the book in the sight⁸ of all the people; (for he was above all the people;) and when he opened it, all the people stood^m up:

6 And Ezra "blessed the Lord, the great God: and all the people answered, Amen, Amen, with elifting up their hands; and they bowed their heads, and worshipped the LORD with their faces to the ground.

7 Also Jeshua, and Bani, and Sherebiah, Jamin, Akkub, Shabbethai, Hodijah, Maaseiah, Kelita, Azariah, Jozabad, Hanan, Pelaiah, and the Levites, caused the people to understand the law; and the people stood in their place.

8 So they read in the book in the law of God adistinctly, and gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading.9

9 ¶ And Nehemiah, which is the Tirshatha, and Ezra the priest the scribe, and the Levites that taught the people, said unto all the people, This day is holy unto the LORD your God; mourn not nor weep: for all the people "wept when they heard the words of the law.

10 Then he said unto them, Go your way, eat the fat,1 and drink the sweet, and send portions unto them for whom nothing is prepared; for this day is holy unto our LORD: neither be ye sorry; for "the joy of the LORD is your strength.2

11 So the Levites stilled all the people, saying, 'Hold your peace; for the day is holy; neither abe ye grieved.

12 And all the people went their way to eat, and to drink, and to send portions, and to make great mirth, because they had understood the words that were deciared unto them.

18 ¶ And on the second day were gathered together the chief of the fathers of all the people, the priests, and the Levites, unto Ezra the scribe, even to understand the words of the law.

NOW in the twenty and fourth day of "this month the children of Israel were assembled with bfasting, and with sackclothes, and earth upon them.

2 And the seed of Israel departed themselves from all strangers,1 and stood and confessed their sins, and the iniquities of their fathers.

3 And they stood up in their place, and read in the book of the law of the LORD their God one fourth part of the day; and another fourth part they confessed, and 2worshipped the LORD their God.3

4 Then stood up upon the stairs,4 of the Levites, Jeshua, and Bani, Kadmiel, Shebaniah. Bunni, Sherebiah, Bani, and Chenani, and acried with a loud voice unto the Lord their God.

5 Then the Levites, Jeshua, and Kadmiel, Bani, Hashabniah, Sherebiah, Hodijah, Shebaniah, and Pethahiah, said, Stand up5 and bless the Lord your God for ever and ever; and blessed be thy glorious name, which is exalted above all blessing and praise.

6 Thou, even thou, 'art LORD alone: thou hast made heaven, the heaven of heavens, with all their host, the earth, and all things that are therein, the seas, and all that is therein, and thou *preservest them all;6 and the host of heaven worshippeth thee.

21 Yea, forty years didst thou sustain them in the wilderness, so that they clacked nothing: their clothes waxed not old, and their feet swelled not.7

22 Moreover, thou agavest them kingdoms and nations, and didst divide them into corners: so they possessed the land of Sihon, and the land of the king of Heshbon, and the land of Og king of Bashan.

23 Their children also multipliedst thou as the stars of heaven, and broughtest them into the land concerning which thou hadst promised to their fathers, that they should go in to possess it.

24 So the children went in and possessed the land, and thou asubduedst before them the inhabitants of the land, the Canaanites, and gavest them into their hands, with their kings, and the people of the land, that they might do with them as they would.

25 And they took strong cities, and a fat land, and possessed houses full of all goods, wells digged, vineyards, and olive-yards, and fruit trees in abundance: so they did eat, and were filled, and became fat, and delighted themselves in thy great goodness.

26 Nevertheless they *were disobedient, and rebelled against thee, and cast thy law behind their backs, and "slew thy prophets, which testified against them to turn them to thee, and they wrought great provocations.

REFLECTIONS.—It is a great mercy when God's word burdens men's consciences with a sense of their sins; and when reformation from sin and fasting for it go hand in hand. Those fasts are made profitable in which men's souls are afflicted for their sins, the bands of wickedness are loosed, intimate fellowship with God enjoyed, and in which God's goodness leads to repentance. O what multitudes of mercies to us and to our fathers may a diligent observer of providence discovery. fathers may a diligent observer of providence discover! What gracious calls and covenants: What delivercommandments, but sinned against thy judgments, (which "if a man do, he shall live in them;) and withdrew the shoulder, and hardened their neck, and would not hear:

30 Yet many years didst thou *forbear them, and stestifiedst against them by thy Spirits in thy prophets; yet would they not give ear: therefore gavest thou them into the hand of the people of the lands.

31 Nevertheless, for thy 'great mercies' sake thou didst not utterly consume them, nor forsake them; for thou art a gracious and merciful God.

32 Now therefore, bour God, the great, the mighty, and the terrible God, who keepest covenant and mercy, let not 'all the trouble' seem little before thee that hath come upon us,7 on our kings, on our princes, and on our priests, and on our prophets, and on our fathers, and on all thy people, since the time of the kings of Assyria unto this day.

33 Howbeit thou art 'just in all that is brought upon us; for thou hast done right, but we have done wickedly.

34 Neither have four kings, our princes, our priests, nor our fathers, kept thy law, nor hearkened unto thy commandments and thy testimonies, wherewith thou didst testify against them.

35 For they have not served thee in their kingdom,8 and in thy great goodness that thou gavest them, and in the large and fat land which thou gavest before them; neither turned they from their wicked works.

36 Behold, we are "servants this day; and for the land that thou gavest unto our fathers, to eat the fruit thereof, and the good thereof, behold, we are servants in it:

37 And it yieldeth much increase unto 'the kings whom thou hast set over us because of our sins: also they have dominion over our bodies, and over our cattle, at their pleasure,⁹ and we are in great distress.

38 And because of all this we make a sure covenant, and write it; and our princes, Levites, and priests, seal unto it.2

REFLECTIONS.-It is honourable to be solemnly and publicly bound in the service of God; and especially is it becoming when they who have the lead in civil or sacred offices, or in solemn fasting, are correspondently forward in regular covenanting with God. But in all our covenants of duty a respect must be had to all God's commandments; and a peculiar guard be placed over those temptations which we have seen to dangerous to ourselves.

direct opposition to that of which we have been guilty, or to which we are most likely to be tempted. plainness and caution are indispensably necessary in the whole frame of them, that all who swear them, or are bound by them, may readily know what obligations they come under.

CHAPTER XI. REFLECTIONS. -The church of God, even on earth, ought to be a holy city. And since Jesus her great ruler and his apostles and prophets dwell in her, men ought cheerfully to fix their residence there. But, alas! regard to carnal advantages or sin-ful liberties, or fear of persecution or expense, often be the occasion of other men's falls and to prove most dangerous to ourselves. They ought to be framed in keep many from the church or cause of God! It [Nehemiah, xi: 1.]—"And the rulers of the people dwelt at Jerusalem." The things recorded in the eleventh chaptes of Nehemiah are connected, by the calculation of Archbishop Usher, with B. C. 445. Thus we have the strange historical relationship of Greece and Palestine to Persia. About this time the Persian empire extended from India to Egypt, including the wide regions between the Black Sea, the Caucasus, the Caspian Sea, the Persian Gulf, the Indian Ocean, and the Arabian desert, and parts of Europe and Africa. 43 Also that day they offered great sacrifices, and rejoiced; for God had made them rejoice with great joy: the wives also and the children rejoiced; so that the joy of Jerusalem was heard even afar off.

44 ¶ And at that time were some appointed over the fchambers for the treasures, for the offerings, for the first-fruits, and for the tithes, to gather into them, out of the fields of the cities, the portions of the law for the priests and Levites: for Judah rejoiced4 for the priests and for the Levites that waited.5

45 And both the singers and the porters kept the ward of their God,6 and the ward of the purification, according to the commandment of David, and of Solomon his son.

46 For in the days of David and Asaph of old there were chief of the singers, and songs of praise and thanksgiving unto God.

47 And all Israel, in the days of Zerubbabel, and in the days of Nehemiah, kgave the portions of the singers and the porters, every day his portion: and they sanctified holy things unto the Levites; land the Levites sanctified them unto the children of Aaron.8

CHAPTER XIII. REFLECTIONS. - It is strange to observe how unacquainted with God's law many are who have daily access to study it! and while the common people are ready to comply with his mandates, often the principal leaders in the church are the most base and treacherous adherents to wickedness. But no dignity must plead exemption from rebuke. They who sin before all should be put to shame before

A scandalous maintenance makes a scandalous ministry. Few ministers are will-ing to serve Christ in hunger and nakedness, and amidst 17 Then I acontended with the nobles of Judah, and said unto them, What evil thing is this that ye do, and profane the sabbath-day?

BOOK OF ESTHER.

In the two preceding books we have seen God's marvellous preservation of those Jews who returned to their own country. In this we have an account of his marvellous preservation of those who continued in the eastern parts of the Persian empire. Particularly, (1) How God brought Esther to be queen, and Mordecai to be great at the Persian court, to prepare them to be instruments of the intended deliverance, ch. i. ii. vi. (2) Upon what provocation, and by what arts, Haman obtained an irrevocable order from the Persian king for the destruction of all the Jews, iii. (3) The great distress into which the publishing of this order cast the Jews, particularly Esther and Mordecai, iv. (4) The defeating of Haman's particular plot against Mordecai's life, v. vi. vii. (5) The defeating of his general plot against the Jewish nation, viii. ix. (6) The joyful commemoration and happy issue of the deliverance, ix. x. [The authorship of this book is not stated. That it was written by an eye-witness of the events which it records is evident. There is a vividness of description, a minuteness of detail, and an acquaintance with the internal arrangements of the royal palace, which prove that the writer must have lived in the court of the Persian monarch. The only man mentioned in the book itself who could have written it is Mordecai; and it is highly probable he was the author. Independent of its sacred character as a part of the canon of Scripture, Esther is highly valuable as affording a vivid picture of the plots and intrigues, the public policy and domestic economy, of the Persian court. It is singular that un the Septuagint version, and others made from it, this book appears in a different form. It has various interpolations, prefixed, interspersed, and appended; but all so woven in as to form a complete and consistent narrative. The additions to the canonical book must have been made at a comparatively early period. P.]

Ahasuerus is the name of the Persian king the Greeks knew as Xerxes, the latter being the Greek form of the word. The characters of the two kings as described by sacred and profane history corre-

The battle of Salamis, in which the Persians under Ahasuerus fought the Greeks, was in sight of the scene represented by the above picture. The Temple of Theseus which we see between the Pedestal of Agrippa on the left, and the stone wall on the right, was in all probability standing when this battle was fought. THEATRE OF BACCHUS DIONYSUS — WHERE ÆSCHYLUS BROUGHT OUT HIS PLAY REPRESENTING THE DEFEAT OF THE PERSIANS LED BY AHASURUS, EIGHT YEARS AFTER THE BATTLE OF SALAMIS. [ESTHER, ii:1.]—"After these things, when the wrath of king Ahasuerus was appeased, he remembered Vashti, and what she had done and what had been decreed against her." The theatre of Bacchus Dionysus is called the cradle of the dramatic art of Greece. Here is where the masterpieces of Æschylus, Sophocles, Euripides and Aristophanes were first brought before the Greeks. This theatre was frequently altered during its history, but when we see the above view we may know that we are looking at the very spot where the theatre always stood. Æschylus whose plays were acted here, fought against the Persian army led by Ahasuerus in the battle of Salamis. Eight years after this battle, his play, the "Persians," was performed in the theatre of Dionysus at Athens. The foundations of two sanctuaries of Dionysus tave been excavated here, one of them dating from the time of the Persian wars. To the north and rising directly above this theatre is the Acropolis, and if one could have been standing on the top of the Acropolis when the battle of Salamis was fought he would have had a view of this decisive conflict between the Greeks and drink, rise up in judgment against those professed Christians who send round their healths, their toasts, and send round sin and death along with them! Yea, ordinarily hard drinking, however unforced, issues in the misery or shame of those who occasioned it. If persons be once intoxicated with liquor, how imprudent their conduct! they are ready to dishonour themselves or their nearest relations, and to require what cannot be decently granted. And when pride meets with pride the issue is contention and ruin. It is easier to overn a kingdom than to rule our own proud spirit. govern a kingdom than to rule our own proud spine. But especially unhappy are those contentions between married persons which happen before company. The bad consequences of them may never be cured. It is indeed dangerous for kingdoms to indulge disobedience in the wives of rulers; but death or divorce ought to be the last means used to prevent it. Nor ought even the general welfare of kingdoms to be founded in injustice to particulars. But O the wisdom and power of God! he makes all the follies and wickedness, as well as the counsels of mankind, to work for his own glory and the good of his church and people.

CHAPTER II. REFLECTIONS.—What is done in haste and passion issues in bitter repentance and grief. And what odd shifts crafty courtiers will take to avoid coming under the power of a female whom they have injured. Yea, men will practise the greatest extravagance and wickedness to gratify their fleshly lusts. Surely we may here observe the need there was of the gospel, in order to reduce men to the observance even of the plainest laws of nature: and at the same time we discern the wisdom of God in carrying on his wise and holy designs by means of the most simple methods. What care he takes or orpaniand and fatherless! And great is the care which men cought to take of them. Yea, it is comely when near relations have a tender and fixed regard for one another. Great prudence is sometimes necessary to enable us to discern what truths may be told, and what concealed, without bordering on falsehood. And the guardians of virgins ought to take the greatest care of them, especially if they are brought into slippery and dangerous situations. How strangely God brings treasonable plots to light! And it is an advantage for courts to have faithful attendants; and very honourable to risk our own life for the sake of our sovereign, even when we have no prospect of reward.

CHAPTER III. REFLECTIONS.—The very worst of men are often exalted to the highest honours: and exalted too to render their shame and ruin in the end the more conspicuous and dreadful. Often the cringing complaisance of others lays a snare for the truly godly. And there is need therefore of strong faith and ardent zeal to make us take a singular course at the hazard of all that is dear to us in this world. But no consideration must influence us to that which Of what intolerable pride, insatiable cruelty, and deep-rooted antipathy to the people of God are some men possessed! And often courtiers mark out the worthiest of the subjects as the objects of their resentments. The people of God are ordinarily loaded with the vilest calumnies in order to encompass their ruin. And pride, malice, and revenge, met together, stick at nothing to obtain their own ends. Some men are very lavish of their money in the service of the devil, who would be absolute churls in the service of God. And crafty courtiers often make princes believe what is for their unspeakable hurt to be for their inexpressible advantage. But miserable is the state of nations when flattering sycophants can sway the sove-reign to everything horrid at their pleasure. And it is absurd for princes or others to riot in mirth and plea-sure when the church is in danger and the public perplexed. But there is no counsel nor device effectual against the Lord. Even Haman's appeal to the lot for marking out a lucky day for the destruction of the

RISON OF SOCRATES, ATHENS—WHERE SOCRATES, BORN FIVE YEARS AFTER THE BATTLE OF SALAMIS, WAS POISONED BY HIS COUNTRYMEN. [Esther, iii:1.]—Socrates was born about five years after the battle of Salamis. He is regarded as the greatest spirit of the pagan world. He was born at the time when Grecian civilization had reached its highest point of splendor. The high civilization to which the Greeks attained at the time Socrates was born is thought to have been due to the triumph which the Greeks, as representing western civilization, won over the Persians, representing the civilization of the east. The armies of the east that aroused and regenerated the Greeks were led by Ahasuerus, the king mentioned in the first verse of the third chapter of Esther. We give above a picture of the prison of Socrates, in sight of the Acropolis and the Pnyx, and of the neighborhood of the battle where the Greeks fought the Persians under Ahasuerus. 9 Then went Haman forth that day_mjoyful and with a glad heart: but when Haman saw Mordecai in the king's gate, that he "stood not up, nor moved for him, he was 'full of indignation against Mordecai.

CHAPTER V. REFLECTIONS. - Prudence and courage must be joined to our prayers if we would succeed in any work for God. And a plentiful harvest of joy shall they reap who sow in the tears and mourning of faith. They who venture all for God mourning of faith. They who venture all for God shall find him able to do for them unspeakably better than their most sanguine hopes. While himself is easily accessible, casting out none that come to him, While himself is he can dispose the spirits of the haughtiest princes to whatever he pleases. But in our dealing with great men, it is best first to conciliate their affection before we ask important favours: and to watch the favourable moment is the best way to insure success. They who are careful to please God need neither fear nor care who are displeased with them for so doing. But pitiful and miserable is the condition of the proud. Easily they are puffed up with that which is intended to ruin them and unmeasurable feated at that which so and them, and unmeasurably fretted at that which could never hurt them. Their pride and discontentment create them numberless miseries, and rob them of the enjoy-ment of their mercies: and the curse of God is often visible upon them in the midst of all their great posses-sions. But it is unhappy for proud spirits to have rash and imprudent advisers, who spur them on to the most debasing resentment. And base are those minds which promote revenge, even the lowest, with alertness and

CHAPTER VI. REFLECTIONS.—How un-searchable are God's judgments, and his ways past finding out! By the most insignificant trifles can he promote his most important purposes. Happy are

But pride and ambition are never satisfied with the most accumulated honours. And it is dangerous for courtiers to have too high an opinion of their own merits, and of their interest with princes, or to presume on more than they really have. Kings ought always to delight in honouring the deserving, and encouraging those that do well. But how confounding is it to proud spirits to be obliged to confer that honour on the distinguished objects of their hatred and contempt, which they had carved out for them-selves! Miserable comforters in a day of distress are those who flatter us in the time of our prosperity; and it is in vain to fight against those whom God protects. But none hurry faster downwards than falling favourites at courts. And sad presages of approaching ruin often seize upon sinners before destruction comes upon them

CHAPTER VII. REFLECTIONS .- God often strangely animates his enemies in power to encourage his people's requests for favour. And a tender regard for natural life at stake makes us very earnest in supplicating deliverance: and surely then we ought to be much more earnest for the life of our own and others The most ruinous and wicked projects are often laid to gratify men's sinful lusts. And though persecuexceedingly detrimental to the state, where nothing can repair the loss of pious and industrious subjects, how often is it practised! Men are ready often to startle at the mention of that very wickedness to which they had given their consent! And sin generally becomes vexatious and burdensome at the last. That is often done thoughtlessly with which, on a moment's cool reflection, we cannot but be shocked. Many seem amazed at the wickedness of others, who overlook the same, or a greater, in themselves. And accomplices in guilt quickly become the bitterest enemies one to another. How dejected in adversity are those who were most proud in prosperity! The most insolent enemies of God's people may quickly be glad to bow at their feet. And every motion creates suspicion against a man whose character is once proved infamous and abandoned. All hands will eagerly help down with falling courtiers; and the ruin of the wicked comes upon them in an instant! Yea, the enemies of God's church are astonishingly taken in their own crafti-ness, and have their pride brought down, their persecution punished, and their mischief returned on their

GENERAL REMARKS ON THE HISTORICAL BOOKS.

[It has been well observed by a recent writer that 'the Old Testament may be regarded from two points of view—the religious and the literary. It is needless here to enlarge on the disproportion between the value of the two, or to re-assert the truism of the uselessness for the highest ends of the most accurate knowledge of the literary history of the Holy Scriptures, and the most minute acquaintance with their criticism, unless we also employ the Scriptures for the purpose for which they were given by divine inspiration, and make them 'profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness. we endeavour to keep both in their places, and especially not to exalt the lower at the expense of the higher, we must recognize the existence of the two characters borne by the Old Testament. We must not be afraid to acknowledge the undoubted fact that it is not merely a revelation of God—his being, his attributes, his will, his works, his ways; but also a national literature, and a collection of books of different characters—historical, prophetical, poetic, and didactic; of books of different characters—instorical, prophetical, poetic, and thusener, or widely different dates, some perhaps misdated, by very diverse authors, and some perhaps wrongly assigned. The notes and reflections attached to the text in this Bible have been written almost exclusively from the religious point of view. The divine origin and sacred character of the book has never been lost sight of. It has been treated, in fact, as a revelation from God rather than a work of human authorship. I now think it well to append a very few observations, from a purely literary stand-point, upon the origin, history, and character of the historical books, which, as arranged in our English version, conclude with

It is important, at the outset, to know exactly what is the meaning of the third canonical as applied to books of Scripture. The meaning of the term canon was primarily a 'cane;' then, technically, a 'measuring cane;' anetaphorically, 'anything which serves to regulate other things.' then. cononical books are those which form the divine rule of faith and practice—by which men determine what they are to believe, and what they are to do. In the primitive church, however, the word was not always employed in the same definite serso. By some it was used to designate those books which were publicly read in the churches; and as in some churches apocryphal books were permitted to be read, the term canonical was given to them. Thus originated the admission by the Church of Rome, and the Greek church, of certain uninspired writings into the canon of Scripture. But while the term canonical was thus somewhat vaguely used in the early church, and by the early fathers, it is most important to bear in mind that, during the first four centuries of our era, there existed no doubt or uncertainty as to the books which were inspired and of divine authority, as contradistinguished from those which were uninspired. The books of Maccabees, and a few others, are classed by some churches among the historical books of the Old Testament; but their inspiration was never admitted by the Jews, or by any Christian writer or church during the first three centuries. The Jewish canon of the Old Testament, which received the sanction of our Lord and his apostles, was identical with that of our present authorized version.

It is well to observe, however, that the arrangement of the books in the Jewish canon was different from ours. The Jews divided the Old Testament into three parts—the Law, the Prophets, and the Psalms.

1. The Law included the five books of Moses—our Pentateuch in fact—and was usually written continuously upon one parchment roll, and called either 'The Law,' or 'The Book of the Law.'

2. The Prophets. Under this general name were comprehended two distinct classes of writings, which were again distinguished from each other by specific titles—(1) The Earlier Prophets, including only the historical books of Joshua, Judges, 1 and 2 Samuel, and 1 and 2 Kings; (2) The Later Prophets, including all those books of the Old Testament, with one exception, which are strictly prophetical, and which were classed under two heads, namely, (a) The Greater Prophets, Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekicl; (b) The Twelve Minor Prophets, from Hosea to Malachi. The general name Prophets was given to them because they contained a large portion of prophetic matter, and were written by men gifted with prophetic power.

3. The Psalms, or Writings, comprehended the remaining books, which were arranged under three heads—(1) The purely poetical, always written in Jewish MSS. with the poetical accentuation, including Job, Psalms, and Proverbs; (2) The Megilloth ('Rolls'), including Canticles, Lamentations, Ruth, Ecclesiastes, and Esther. In later times these five were appointed to be read on certain festival days. (3) The third division included Daniel, Ezra, Nehemiah, and I and 2 Chronicles.

This threefold division of the Old Testament canon into Law, Prophets, and Psalms, appears to have been generally adopted immediately after the close of the canon, about the year B.C. 425. It is first mentioned in the prologue to the Greek translation of 'The Wisdom of Sirach,' which may be dated about B.C. 130. It is mentioned by Philo and Josephu, the latter giving a full list. It was aniversally known among the Jews in the time of our Lord; hence the vast importance of his words as recorded in Luke 24. 44: 'All things must be fulfilled, which were written in the Law of Moses, and in the Prophets, and in the Psalms, concerning me.' In these words our Lord bears clear testimony to the prophetic character, and consequently to the plenary inspiration, of the whole of the Old Testament.

The enumeration of the books was not the same in the Jewish canon as in ours. The Talmud, for example, makes the total number of books in the Old Testament twenty-four; Josephus makes it twenty-two; we make thirty-nine. The Talmud arranges them as follows: Law, 5; Prophets, 8; Psalms, 11. This is done by counting 1 and 2 Samuel one, 1 and 2 Kings one, the twelve minor prophets one, 1 and 2 Chronicles one, Ezra and Nehemiah one. Josephus has the same plan, only he unites Ruth with Judges, and Lamentations with Jeremiah.

The arrangement of the books in our Bibles is widely different from that followed by the Jews, and is more in accordance with their character and subject-matter. Our arrangement is not modern. We find it in the Septuagint version, which was made in Egypt in the third century B.C. It was followed by Jerome in his translation, which is now well known as the Latin Vulgate. It was adopted by Luther and the Reformers. The general plan is a threefold division into historical, poetical, and prophetical. The first division embraces seventeen books, terminating with Esther; the second division five, terminating with Canticles; and the third division seventeen. Each of the two first divisions is arranged chronologically, and this is very important to the student who wishes to read them systematically. In the third division, however, the chronology is not adhered to; and the reader is apt to become confused when passing suddenly from Daniel, one of the latest, to Hosea, one of the earliest of the prophets; and again from Zephaniah, who prophesied during the reign of Josiah, to Haggai, who lived after the exile. It will be well to remember that in our Bibles the prophets are divided into two groups, the greater and the minor. The former group includes Daniel, and is arranged chronologically; the latter includes the twelve, and is also arranged with a near approach to chronological order.

After these general observations on the whole of the Old Testament canon, I shall now direct special attention to the first great division of our English Bible, which comprehends the Historical Books.

1. The Pentateuch contains an outline of the history of the world from the creation till the death of Moses. History forms its groundwork. Wherever doctrines or moral precepts are introduced, they are connected with historic facts. As a history we may inquire, Who was its author? When was it written? and What were its sources; or, in other words, whence did its author derive his information?

The Pentateuch professes to have been written by Moses during the last forty years of his life. Such at least is the impression which a thoughtful perusal would leave on any unprejudiced mind. In Ex. 17. 14, it is recorded that the Lord commanded Moses to write an account of the war with Amalek 'in the Book.' The Hebrew words indicate a book well known to Moses—a book intended to be handed down to posterity, at once for the future guidance of rulers, and to show that God would execute his prophetic judgments. Of this book Moses was the author; and we find him from time to time receiving divine instructions to record in it the great events of Jewish history, Ex. 24. 1-7; 34. 27; Nu. 33. 1, 2. The account of its completion and solemn delivery into the custody of the priests is most important: 'And Moses wrote this law, and delivered it unto the priests, the sons of Levi, . . and unto all the elders of Israel. . . And Moses commanded them, saying, At the end of every seven years, in the solemnity of the year of release, in the feast of tabernacles, when all Israel is come to appear before the Lord thy God in the place which he shall choose, thou shalt read this law before all Israel in their hearing,' De. 31. 9-11.

We have thus an indication of the way in which the Pentateuch originated. It was not written at once. Genesis was first compiled by Moses, apparently from authentic and inspired documents, written by the patriarchs, and handed down through successive generations. Genesis formed the groundwork of the Bible. When it was compiled it was called The Book. The rest of the Pentateuch consists mainly of narratives or journals of passing events, also written by Moses, and added to The Book from time to time. The Book, thus gradually formed, was at length, before the death of its great author, committed to the care of the priests, and placed beside the ark of the covenant: 'And it came to pass when Moses had made an end of writing the words of this law in The Book [so the Hebrew reads] until they were finished, that Moses commanded the Levites which bare the ark . . . saying, Take this book of the law and put it in the side of the ark . . . that it may be there for a witness against you,' De. 31. 24.

These direct indications of authorship are corroborated by evidence of another kind, but no less convincing. The book abounds with minute incidental allusions to the manners and customs. private life and public polity, of the Egyptians, with descriptions of and references to the topography, physical features, and products of the wilderness of Sinai; with genealogical and ethnological accounts of ancient peoples and tribes. The writer must therefore have been personally acquainted with Egypt and the whole desert of Arabia; and he must have possessed besides most extensive learning. All these things point to one man, and one only. Moses, who was brought up at the court of Pharaoh, who was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, who spent forty years in Egypt, and forty in the peninsula of Sinai - Moses is the only man on whom the scholar could fix his attention as the author of the Pentateuch.

What is indicated in the Pentateuch itself is fully stated by subsequent writers. In a literary point of view, the testimony of antiquity to the authorship and redibility of the Pentateuch is most interesting. The first evidence is that of a contemporary—a man who had fuller opportunity of knowing the whole truth than any other. When Joshua entered on his office as Moses' successor, he thus records the charges given to him by Jehovah: 'Be thou strong and very courageous, that thou mayest observe to do according to all the law which Moses my servant commanded thee. . . . This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth; but thou shalt meditate thereon day and night,' &c., Jos. 1. 6, 8. Again, at the close of his life he himself gave this last solemn admonition to the Israelites: 'Be ye therefore very courageous to keep and to do all that is written in the book of the law of Moses, Jos. 23. 6. This book of the law is quoted or referred to by a line of illustrious authors extending from the time of Joshua down to the commencement of our era. A close inspection proves that every book of the Old Testament, with the exception of Job, indicates in one way or another the previous existence of the Pentateuch. In many of them it is mentioned by name, Ju. 3. 4; 1 Sa. 2. 13; 1 Ki. 2. 3, sq.; 2 Ki. 23. 25; 2 Ch. 23. 18; Ps. 19. 7-11; Dan, 9. 11, 13; Ezra 3. 2; in others it is quoted; in others simply referred to. The testimony of Nehemiah, the last of the historical writers in the Old Testament, is especially worthy of note. He speaks of Moses as its author, Ne. 8. 14; he calls it the 'book of the law of God,' Ne. 8. 18; he says it was read throughout at the feast of tabernacles; and he gives a summary of its contents, No. 9. 1, sq. And the last of the prophetical books is equally clear in its testimony. Malachi says, 'Remember ye the law of Moses my servant, which I commanded unto him in Horeb for all Israel,' Mal. 4. 4.

I have now brought down the testimony for the authorship and authenticity of the Pentateuch to the close of the Old Testament period. I have shown it to be clear and uniform from Joshua to Malachi. The Pentateuch was known to the whole Jewish nation. It contained the code of national law, the directory for national worship, the confession of the national faith. Many of its enactments were felt to be burdensome; but no attempt was ever made to dispute their divine authority. The unanimous and continuous testimony of the Jews regarding the Pentateuch was that Moses wrote it by divine inspiration. That testimony is embodied in the authentic records of national history, in the odes and hymns of poets, and in the writings of prophets. In fact it pervades the whole national literature. We may therefore conclude that 'at no time from the days of Joshua would it have been possible for any man, or any body of men, to introduce among the Jewish sacred records a modern work, or a modern compilation of ancient fragmencs and traditions, and to gain for it the confidence and respect of the nation. The imposition would have been at once detected and exposed

The chain of evidence does not end here. It extends unbroken down to the time of the New Testament, and from that period to our own day. In the apocryphal books of Ecclesiasticus (ch. 24. 23), Esdras (1 Esd. 1. 6), Baruch (ch. 1. 20), and Maccabees (2 Mac. 7. 30), the law of Moses is distinctly mentioned and quoted as authoritative. Philo, the distinguished Jewish philosopher of Alexandria, wrote a life of Moses, and gives a detailed account of his great work, the Pentateuch. Josephus, the representative of the Jewish literati in Palestine, as Philo was in Egypt, is equally full and clear in his testimony.

I have hitherto cited Jewish testimony alone. Some may perhaps affirm that the Jews were not impartial witnesses. I do not admit this. I affirm, on the contrary, that they were the best and safest witnesses. But to take away all ground of objection, I shall quote a few heathen testimonies. Hecatæus of Abdera, a contemporary of Alexander the Great, and a man famed for learning and wisdom, wrote a history of the Jews, in which he has described the exodus, and attributed the Pentateuch to the great lawgiver. Eupolemus, a Greek historian, who lived a century and a half later, states that Moses was the author of the book Manetho, a learned Egyptian of the age of Hecatseus, ascribes to Moses the formation of the Jewish code. To these might be added Tacitus, Juvenal, Longinus, and many other classic writers, all of whom ascribe to Moses the institution of that code of laws which we find in the Pentateuch. authors cover a period extending from the time of Alexander, when the Greeks first became curious on the subject of Jewish history, to that of the emperor Aurelian, when the literature of the Jews had been thoroughly sifted by the acute and learned Alexandrians. They constitute not the full voice of heathenism, but only an indication of what that voice was. Here then we have a mass of sound historical evidence for the genuineness and authenticity of the Pentateuch such as no other ancient writing can boast of."

I have stated that the Pentateuch is a history. It is not, however, an ordinary history. It has marked characteristics, which the student must keep in mind if he would fully comprehend it. 'It is in no sense a civil history, or record of general revolutions in human affairs, or of even intellectual and social progress. It opens with an account of the origin of the earth and its various inhabitants, showing the preparations made for man-the last link in the great chain of creation-and the special object of the history in his moral and spiritual relations. The object of this record, however, was not to teach science or natural history, but to point out listinctly the relation subsisting between the Creator and his creatures, which constitutes the fundamental idea of all true religion and worship.' delineations of the progress of human affairs, given in the immediately succeeding portions, composed in the spirit, or with the design, of mere secular history. There are indeed notices of the origin of the arts, of the founding of cities, of the wars of some ancient tribes, but all these are referred to in a way which plainly shows their entire subordination to the sacred object of the narrative. The whole history of the Cainites, for instance, is disposed of in ten verses (Ge. 4. 16-26), while the particulars referred to are adduced as indications of the character of this rejected family, and of the sources whence they looked for happiness. The wars of the eastern kings, too, are only noticed on account of the part Abraham took in rescuing Lot; and to introduce the interview of the patriarch with Melchizedec, The object, then, of the Pentateuch was not to give a full or systematic history either of the physical or political world, but simply to notice such facts in connection with both as tended to show in what relation the universe and man stand to God; what duties God requires of man; and what provision God has made for man's temporal and eternal welfare. Whatever is calculated to throw light on these subjects is narrated-all else is excluded. This I take to be the key to the narratives in the Pentateuch. This shows why incidents in the personal and family histories of the patriarchs are minutely related, why conversations, dreams, and visions are recorded with great fulness of detail; while the rise of dynasties and kingdoms is barely mentioned. This shows, too, why the account of the creation of man occupies such a large space, while the most stupendous creations and arrangements of the material universe-the countless orbs of heaven, the strata of the earth's crust, the air, the ocean, the trees, the grass, the flowers, the multitudinous forms of animal life-are either passed over or despatched in a word or two. In fact the Pentateuch looks at, and speaks of, the whole of this world, and the whole material universe, merely in its relation to a creating and governing God, and to man as a moral and immortal being. The opening words of the Pentateuch may be regarded as intended to show the relation of God to the physical universe. The next part his relation to the whole human race—that in him they live, and move, and have their being; that to him they are responsible; that by him they will finally be judged. All that follows-the great body of the Pentateuch, and indeed of the Bible-was designed to show the special and peculiar relation of God to his church and covenant people. They are his by a double ownership. He watches over them with a double interest and care.

The grand design, therefore, of the Pentateuch is to show God as the Creator and Ruler of the universe; to show when, and for what purpose, the present terrestrial economy was instituted; to show that mankind is one fraternal tribe, protected, guided, and provided for by the care of a Father, the only and omnipotent Creator; to show the object for which man was created, and the destiny in store for him; to show the provision made for man's spiritual as well as his temporal wants, in the promise of a Messiah; and to show the way in which God selects, governs, and redeems his church. All the historic facts, all the incidental allusions, all the scientific notices, are subservient to one or other of these objects. The Pentateuch is a system of divine truth grafted on a series of physical and historical events. It is this characteristic which makes it so infinitely superior to all the so-called sacred books in the world. The Pentateuch is not a collection of poems more or less beautiful; it is not a philosophical speculation on the origin of the universe; it is not an unintelligible jumble which expositors can twist at pleasure from a cosmological essay into a treatise on ethics. It is a sacred history; but a history designed to show God's relation to the universe as Creator and Sustainer; and especially God's dealings with man, and man's duty to God. is only when viewed in this light we can understand why the history of the fall is given with such minuteness; and why the biographies of three patriarchs occupy whole chapters, while the histories of the mightiest nations and potentates are dismissed in a single sentence. It was to the patriarchs God revealed himself; to them the promise of the Messiah was given; and hence to those wandering chiefs attaches a grandeur and an interest greater far than that of the Babels and the Nimrods of the world.

In the remaining historical books the history of the people of Israel, which was begun in the Pentateuch, is carried on continuously from the death of Moses to the re-establishment of the Jews in Palestine after the captivity, under the leadership of Ezra and Nehemiah. They thus cover a period of a little more than a thousand years. They may be divided into two groups. The first group begins with Joshua and ends with 2 Kings. The history is continuous. The book of Joshua closes with his death, after narrating the partition of Palestine among the tribes, and the overthrow of the most formidable of the Canaanitish kings. Judges embraces the history of Israel from the death of Joshua to the death of Samson. The books of Samuel continue it down to the close of David's reign; and the two books of Kings narrate the history of the Jews to the Babylonish captivity. second group begins with Chronicles and ends with Nehemiah. The history here is also continuous, but to a large extent it overlaps the former group. The books of Chronicles begin with genealogical tables which extend back to Adam, and reach onward to David, where the narrative is taken up, and a history of the kingdom of Judah given down to the captivity. The narrative differs from that in Kings in this respect, that nothing is said of the kingdom of the ten tribes. Ezza and Nehemiah join on to the end of Chronicles, and record the return of the several bands of Jews from Babylon, the rebuilding of the temple, and the reestablishment of the Jewish polity in Jerusalem.

The books of Ruth and Esther may be regarded as in some respects standing apart from both these groups. They are monographs of two of the most remark. able women in Cad Testament history. The former narrates the almost emara-able women in Cad Testament history. The former narrates the almost enparal-leled filial devotion of a stranger, whose fortunes as one of the ancestors of King David and of the Messiah, had a peculiar interest for the ancestors. The latter contains the romantic story of Queen Esther, and her noble act of ascertained. Joshua doubtless wrote the greater part of the book which bears his name; and Samuel may have been the author of Judges and a part of the books of Samuel. Ezra and Nehemiah probably composed those books which have been called after them; but more than this we cannot say. Another and much more interesting question presents itself to the thoughtful reader. Whence did the authors obtain their information? It could not have been in all cases from personal knowledge, for the book of Judges embraces the history of about five hundred years; Samuel of more than a hundred years; Kings of four hundred and fifty years; and Chronicles of a still longer period. Direct revelation from God was, of course, possible. Some of the facts and truths recorded were confessedly obtained from that source; but we have no evidence that ever ordinary history was revealed. The analogy of Scripture is altogether opposed to such a theory. Whatever came within the sphere of ordinary observation was recorded in the ordinary way. There was no new revelation of it to the mind of the historian; and there was no supernatural power exerted farther than was necessary to enable fallible man to write observed facts with infallible accuracy.

In the book of Genesis we have some incidental evidence of the source from which Moses obtained his information. Close observation shows to even the ordinary reader traces of distinct narratives, or documents; sometimes overlapping each other, and recording events from different points of view, and with different details. Other, and recording events from united to points of view, and with a three are the These documents generally begin with some set phrase, such as, 'These are the generations of the heavens and the earth, Ge. 2. 4; 'This is the book [or writing] of the generations of Adam,' ch. 5. 1; 'These are the generations of Shem,' ch. 'Now these are the generations of Esau,' ch. 36. 1. The details of facts, of genealogies and lists of names, and of long conversations, are given with a minuteness and circumstantiality which indicate an actor or eye-witness. The words and phrases used, and the general style, show distinctive individuality. My belief is that the leading personages in primeval history-Adam, Seth, Enoch, Abraham, Jacob, Joseph—each recorded the events which transpired in his own times; and that the records thus prepared were handed down from generation to generation, until at length they were embodied by Moses, under the infallible guidance of the Holy Spirit, in one continuous history.

In addition to the documents which Moses appears to have used in the preparation of the book of Genesis, he mentions and quotes from a separate work, 'The Book of the Wars of the Lord,' Nu. 21. 14, 15. The title and the quotation show that this must have been a collection of odes, composed at different periods, to celebrate the wars waged by Israel, under the guidance of Jehovah. They may have been so connected by brief annals as to form a continuous history, comp. Nu. 21. 17, 18; 27. 3. The authors of the succeeding historical books of the Old Testament seem to have made full use of national records and contemporary annals. Joshua (ch. 10, 13) and the author of 2 Samuel (ch. 1, 18) quote from the Book of Jasher, which appears to have contained a collection of odes on some of the most remark sble events of Israelitish history. At the close of the reign of Solomon, the sacred writer refers for a fuller history of the events of that important period to the Book of the Acts of Solomon, 1 Ki. 11. 41; and the character of the reference implies that the writer was himself largely indebted to that book. In regard to the history of King David the author of 1 Chronicles says:—'Now the acts of David the king, first and last, behold, they are written in the book of Samuel the seer, and in the book of Nathan the prophet, and in the book of Gad the seer; with all his reign and his might, and the times that went over him, and over Israel, and over and the singlet, and the times that went over nim, and over israel, and over all the kingdoms of the countries,' ch. 29, 29, 30. In one or other of the historical books, reference is made to the following works: 'The Prophecy of Ahijah the Shilonite,' 2 Ch. 9. 29; 'The Visions of Iddo the Seer against Jeroboam the Son of Nebat,' 2 Ch. 9. 29; 'The Book of the Chronicles of the Kings of Judah,' 1 Ki. 14. 19; 'The Book of the Kings of Israel and Judah,' 2 Ch. 27. 7. The two last are probably identical, and are referred to very often both by the writers of Kings and Chronicles. The work must have been large, and was perhaps an official or national record of the leading events which occurred both in the northern and southern kingdom. Mention is likewise made of histories or annals written by Jehu the son of Hanani, 2 Ch. 20. 34; by Isaiah the prophet, 2 Ch. 26. 22; by Hosai (rendered in the English version 'the Sayings of the Seers,' 2 Ch. 33. 19); and of 'The Chronicles of King David,' 1 Ch. 27. 24. All these were probably contemporary works, from which the sacred writers extracted, under divine guidance, the facts which they wove into Bible history.

It has been objected to the view given above with regard to the original sources of the book of Genesis, that the art of writing was unknown in those primeval times. If this can be proved, the theory of written documents is untenable. But recent discoveries have dissolved this argument, and have established the fact that the art of writing with ink upon papyrus was known in Egypt long before the days of Moses. A number of Egyptian papyri, written in the hieratic character. are now in the British Museum, all of which are of the age of Moses or anterior to it. There is one in the Bibliothèque Impériale at Paris, which appears to have been written two centuries before Abraham migrated to Palestine. Recent discovery has achieved still greater triumphs on behalf of divine revelation. Away in the midst of a parched desert, near the banks of the Euphrates, are great mounds covered with dust and sand. They mark the site of Abraham's native city, Ur of the Chaldees. Some of them have been excavated, and bricks, cylinders, and other monuments have been dug up, bearing inscriptions dating back from the time of Abraham to the period of the confusion of tongues. Thus it is that some of the very earliest monuments in the world bear inscriptions which are still legible; and this fact, taken in connection with incidental allusions in the book of Genesis, seems to indicate that He who first taught the human tongue to articulate intelligible sounds, taught at the same time the human hand to trace intelligible characters.

The foregoing considerations give an additional antiquarian interest to the historical books of the Old Testament. We recognize in them not merely the earliest specimens of literature, but venerable records handed down from periods when most of us have been accustomed to think the means for forming a literature did not exist. It seems to me highly probable that to Adam the revelation of God's creative work was first made, and by him it was recorded; and that to him we are indebted for the striking narrative of his converse with God in Eden, and for the whole account of the fall. Noah was the natural historian of the deluge. Abraham was his own biographer, and we find in his life just such simple and graphic details of facts, incidents, and conversations as an eye-witness would record. Jacob alone could have written so fully the story of the dream at Bethel, the romantic incidents of Padan-aram, and the meeting with Jehovah at Mahanaim. Joseph was probably the last whose personal memorials Moses embodied in his

To some this view may appear strange; it may perhaps run counter to their early impressions, or to what may be called traditional theory. But does it detract one iota from the authenticity of the sacred history? Does it contradict one single passage in God's Word? Does it tend in the least to contravene the truth of the Mosaic authorship or plenary inspiration of the Pentateuch? It seems to me that it tends to encircle this venerable book with a yet brighter halo of glory, and to give it if possible a yet higher claim upon the attention of the Christian scholar and antiquary. We can see in it not merely a connected history drawn up by Moses; but we can recognize, embodied in that history, the sublime story of creation written by Adam in Eden; we can recognize there Noah's own account of the deluge, perhaps composed in the ark; we can recognize fragments of the autobiographies of Abraham, Jacob, and Joseph. We can see besides the infinite wisdom of God pervading each fragment as well as the combined history—giving life-like reality to its characters, giving perfect accuracy to its details, giving infallible certainty to scientific developments, and investing with absolute historic truth its wondrous and cheering prophecies and promises. THE BOOK OF JOB.

By whom the book of Job was written is uncertain, and conjecture is useless. It is, for the substance of it, a true history of real facts. Job is represented as really existent as Noah or Daniel, Eze. 14. 14, 20; and as a patient sufferer who obtained a joyful deliverance, Ja. 5. 11. It is an ancient history. The length of Job's life; the rare use of the divine name of Jehovan, and frequent use of Shaddar, or Almighty and All-sufficient; the remarkable remains of religion in the land of Uz and the places about; the mentioning of no other idolatry but that of worshipping the sun and moon; the never making any plain allusion to the dividing of the Red Sea, or to the appearance of God to the Israelites in the wilderness, which lay at no great distance from the land of Uz; strongly tempt one to think that Job's distress might be about the time when Moses lived in the land of Midian, or perhaps a hundred years before. We have here, (1) The history of Job's sufferings and his remarkable patience under them, issuing in a sad mixture of human weakness in his cursing the day of his birth, ch. i. iii. (2) A hot dispute between him and Eliphaz, Bildad, and Zophar, his friends, Whether remarkable judgments be certain tokens of the wickedness of those upon whom they are inflicted? The aim of Job is to bewail his own affliction, complain of its weight, justify himself from gross wickedness or hypocrisy, and prove that wicked men often prosper in this world while the godly are exposed to manifold calamities. The scope of his friends is to prove that no good man is subjected to extraordinary calamities, but that the most wicked men ordinarily are; and hence to condemn Job as a hypocrite, because of his uncommon troubles, iv.-xxxi. (3) A decision of the dispute; by Elihu, then by Jehovah. The aim of Elihu is to leave Job's state undetermined, or even to admit it to be good; and only to charge him with his misbehaviour under his trouble, as too arrogant and self-justifying, especially when he had to do with a God of infinite sovereignty, greatness, power, wisdom, and justice. The scope of Jehovah's speech is to convince Job of his meanness, and of his own infinite power, greatness, and extensive influence; and thereby lead him into a sense of his iniquity in insisting so much upon his own justification, and complaining so unguardedly of the providence of God: and at last he justifies him, in opposition to his three friends, in his character and sentiments, xxxii.-xlii. (4) The whole issues in Job's great honour and redoubled prosperity, xlii. In this book we have at once a most noted encouragement to patience, and a system of the most ancient believers' apprehensions and faith concerning the wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness, and sovereignty of God; and concerning his works of creation and providence; concerning the original and actual corruption of mankind; concerning redemption by Christ and the usefulness of good works; and, in fine, concerning the resurrection of the

[The age of the book of Job is a subject of deep interest to the biblical scholar. We have no direct evidence bearing upon it. Jewish tradition assigns to it a very high antiquity. The critic, however, must depend for his arguments mainly on the character of the book itself—on its language and style; on the manners and customs it portrays; and on its reference to, or silence regarding, the great facts and personages of sacred history. All are agreed that the language of the book is of the oldest type found in the Bible. It has certain peculiarities. It has a closer affinity to the Arabic than any other of the inspired writings, arising from the close connection of Job with the nomads of the Arabian desert. There are besides many Aramaic words and phrases in it; but these are of an archaic form, entirely different from those found in the later Hebrew writings. The style of the book—its terse, rugged, and highly poetic language—resembles portions of the book of Genesis, the song of Deborah, and the Proverbs of Solomon, and is characteristic of a primitive and imaginative people. 'The language,' says a recent writer, 'belongs altogether to a period when thought was slow, but profound and intensely concentrated; when the weighty and oracular sayings of the wise were wont to be engraved apon rocks with a pen of iron and in characters of molten lead. It is truly a lapidary style, such as was natural only in an age when writing, though known, was rarely used, before language had acquired clearness, fluency, and flexibility, but lost much of its freshness and native force.' The manners and eustoms so clearly developed are those of a simple and primitive people. The vast flocks and herds, the semi-nomad, semi-agricultural mode of life, the profuse hospitality, the sudden and sweeping reverses of fortune, are all characteristic of the earliest patriarchal age. The nearest approaches to them are in the histories of Abraham at Beersheba and Laban in Mesopotamia. This book affords a very graphic and full picture of the manners and customs, domestic, social, and political, of the period. Yet there is no straining in it—no aiming at effect; all is easy, natural, simple, affording clear proof that the writer was personally familiar with the scenes he depicted. The free, vigorous, and wild simplicity of the life portrayed in the book of Job bears the stamp of a hoar antiquity; and the style of the narrative shows that the author must have been contemporary with the events. Another consideration leads to the same conclusion. The book is silent regarding the Mosaic law. Its peculiar enactments and institutions, which gave a tone and distinctive character to all the subsequent literature of the Jewish nation, were manifestly unknown to the author of this book, as well as to all the actors introduced into it. The book is silent too regarding the Egyptian bondage, the exodus, the wilderness journey, and the entrance into Canaan. This silence can only be accounted for by the supposition that the date of the book was anterior to those events. 'The sanctions and penalties of the law, if known, could scarcely have been passed over by the opponents of Job, while the deliverance of Israel and the overthrow of the Egyptians supplied exactly the examples which they required to silence the complaints and answer the arguments of Job.' The forms of law, the system of worship, the illustrations and allusions of the book are those of the patriarchal age. Everything therefore in this book tends to show that it 'stands apart from all other productions of the Hebrews, belongs to a different epoch, and, in accordance with the surest canons of criticism, to an earlier age.' In all this the incidental statements in Job are in entire harmony with the notices in the in Job are in entire harmony with the notices in the New Testament. He is the great tempter of man, insinuating doubts, suggesting evil, visiting with bodily infirmity. He is spoken of as 'prince of this world,' and even 'god of this world,' Jn. 12. 31; 2 Co. 4. 4:—that is, of the physical world, able to employ the elements as his instruments against the people of God.

REFLECTIONS.—God can easily raise up instances of remarkable piety, even among wild Arabs and amidst wealth: and he delights to propagate the fame of such as are remarkably pious. It is a mercy for children to have parents deeply and constantly contact to the contact of the results of the contact of the results of the res cerned for the glory of God and the good of their souls. However lawful feasting and mirth may be on some occasions, there is always need after it to examine our hearts and conduct, and to supplicate the pardon of our mistakes in it. How closely Satan attends saints, ministers, and angels, particularly when they present themselves before God! We have great need to be themselves before God: we have great need to be always sober and vigilant, when our adversary the devil goeth about as a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour. And many, not less odious to God in the seeking through the State through the seeking through the seekin their tempers and designs than Satan, thrust themselves into the assemblies of God's people in their house of into the assemblies of God's people in their house of prayer. The noted favourites and servants of God are peculiarly the objects of Satan's malice. But precise are the limits by which he is restricted by God, who knoweth all his designs. And they who approve themselves faithful servants to God, will find him faithful to them in preserving them from the snares of the devil. It is very common for Satan and his instruments to reproach the people of God as selfish and hypocritical in their religion: and almost as common to ascertain their declarations with curses and impreto ascertain their declarations with curses and imprecations. And when God, for holy ends, lengthens Satan's chain against his own people, how inexpressibly forward is he in carrying on mischief to the ut-most extent of his permission? There is need then in our happiest estate to rejoice with trembling. How heavy are sore troubles when they come from every quarter and on everything, one upon the neck of another; and the last the most dreadful. Happy is it Happy is it when we are graciously weaned from created comforts, of which we may be so quickly and in so awful a manner deprived. But no affliction should indispose us for God's worship. The more trouble we feel the more need we have of his grace to support us. And the views of our death should wean us from perishing things. All that we have is God's gift lent or given All that we have is God's gift, lent or given to us: and whatever we lose, enough is left to deserve our thankfulness. Nay, a spirit of meekness bestowed our thankfulness. Nay, a spirit of meekness bestowed is a greater blessing than all that God can take from us. But, nevertheless, how powerful are the influences of God's grace, that can render his people composed and heartily resigned to his will under the sharpest trials! In all my troubles let me view God's hand and acquiesce in his will: and let them all drive me into the arms, the become from God. into the arms, the bosom of my God.

CHAPTER II. [Ver. 3. The object of God was holy and wise, though that of Satan was wicked and foolish. Satan insinuated that piety could not exist independent of the selfish expectation of reward. In opposition to this the Lord desired to demonstrate to Satan by a living example the existence of true and Satan by a living example the existence of true and disinterested piety. And this was no mere useless demonstration of truth. Satan was man's great tempter. Had he not been signally defeated in his plans and arguments, his power must have been largely augarguments, mented. P.

Ver. 8. [Sitting in ashes is a sign of deepest humiliation and sorrow. It is still practised in the East. I have witnessed it on more than one occasion. Any sudden and heavy calamity often drives the afflicted one not only to sit down on the heap of dust and ashes,

REFLECTIONS.—How restless, impudent, steady, and active is the devil in prosecuting his malice against the saints! Disappointment but sharpens his rage, and makes him return more furious to the attack: and though proved a liar he persists in his accusations. It is honourable and necessary to resist him steadfort in the is honourable and necessary to resist him steadfast in the faith. But above all, great is the mercy that we have lesus as our advocate to repel his bold accusations. Jesus as our advocate to reper his bold accusations. To what astonishing extent doth God, for his own wise ends, permit Satan to afflict his dearest saints; nay, his Son! But glorious conquerors are they whose mind, in humble abasement, corresponds with their lowest or most loathsome circumstances of body. Heavy indeed is the trial when those who ought to be our sympathizing directors in trouble become our tempters to the most horrid sins; -to rage and disquiet; to blasphemy;—to trespass more and more against the Lord; and when those who come to comfort us have their mouths shut! But happy is he who endureth temptation; when he is tried he shall receive a crown of life! Happy is he who abhors to parley with vile suggestions, and who receives troubles as the love-messengers of his God! God can make our friends useless to us, even when they are so kind as to come useless to us, even when they are so kind as to come to comfort us, and so wise as to prefer the house of mourning to the house of mirth. What frightful changes disease can make on us! Why then should we be proud of vile bodies? But worthless are those friends who hasten from the chamber of disease, and are glad to flee from the melancholy door: an awful proof that they are unmindful of and unprepared for death. Let then no health but what Christ is, no friend but God in him, be the trust, the boast of my soul! In the time of need all others take to themselves the continuous of the continuous and the continuous Microschel the wings of the morning and fly away. Misers comforters, nay ensnaring tormenters, are they all.

we. Ver. 1. [The close connection between the end of Ver. I. [The close connection between the end of the second and beginning of the third chapter ought not to be overlooked. 'After this opened Job his mouth,'—after the seven days of silent pantomime that ushered them in. Could anything have been more trying to the temper, more crushing to the spirit, more harrowing to the feelings of the poor bereaved, plaguestricken sufferer than the conduct of these three men? stricken sufferer than the conduct of these three men? They came professedly to mourn with and comfort him; but justly has their heartless conduct been made the basis of the ironical proverb, 'Job's comforters.'

The loud lamentations, the rending of their garments, the throwing of dust on their heads, and the seven days the throwing of dust on their heads, and the seven days and nights of blank silence, were all, by the wasted and heart-broken sufferer, interpreted, and, as the sequel shows, rightly interpreted, in the light of insults rather than sympathy. The visit of the three friends was probably a part of Satan's work; and if so, it was surely his masterpiece. To assail the isolated, exhausted, agonized man with hypocritical professions of sympathy, with illogical arguments. and finally with sympathy, with illogical arguments, and finally with coarse and cruel invective, was enough to drive him to coarse and cruet invective, was enough to drive him to despair. We can scarcely wonder that, under such circumstances, even the patience of Job was exhausted, and that he broke forth into those passionate utterances, of which an example is given in this third chap-

Ver. 26. [This sublime and pathetic, and yet humiliating speech, must be regarded as the commencement of Job's 'sin with his lips.' Hitherto his outward conduct and language had been pure and perfect; now under unparalleled trial and temptation he bursts forth into passionate exclamations. What a sad comment is this on his noble declaration: 'The Lord gave, and the Lord both taken away, blassed he the page of the the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the REFLECTIONS. - How dreadful are the days, the ages, in hell, on which heaven frowns, and which earth forgets, joy forsakes, and curses attend. The best, when left to themselves, may fall into the greatest folly and guilt; become mad in their wishes, liberal of their curses, cruel to their friends, and unthankful to their God! but how much better is the never-cursed day of our spiritual and eternal birth than that of our natural! How helpless are men when they come into this world! But kind is the care of Providence about them. How bid it welcome. To quarrel with the life which God bestows, is to sin against our own mercies. Fretfulness and impatience at our lot can only aggravate our sufferings. And to reflect on God's providence is to accuse himself. It is our happiness that our time is in God's hand. The more irksome this life is we should be the more solicitous to prepare for a better. And they only are fit to die who are content to live, and, satisfied under every burden, wait cheerfully the Lord's pleasure.

CHAPTER IV. Then Eliphaz, a descendant of Thou wilt doubtless be incensed Esau, replied, ver. 2. Thou wilt doubtless be incensed by the slightest attempts to offer a reply: but who can by the slightest attempts to oner a reply: but who can restrain himself from speaking the truth upon such a pressing occasion? 3. Behold, in former times thou hast, with great pains and success, instructed many under trouble and corrected their mistakes; and by thy thinder trouble and corrected their histakes; and by thy kind and pertinent advices hast mightily encouraged the dispirited. 4. By thy discourse thou hast encouraged and supported those whose hearts were ready to sink; and hast settled them who trembled under the burdens and hast settled them who trembled under the burdens of their adversity. 5. But now, when fallen into their condition, thou canst not practise thy own lessons, but faintest and art struck with consternation. 6 Is not this the time to exercise thy piety, thy confidence in God, thy hope of blessings, and thy integrity of conversation? Or shall all thy religious appearances turn out a mere nothing? 7. Too good reason thou hast to suspect thyself a hypocrite: for think if thou canst remember one instance of an innocent and godly man suspect thysen a hypotenes for think it thou can't remember one instance of an innocent and godly man who was ever punished with such remarkable strokes of divine vengeance as thou art.

REFLECTIONS.—Such as are in sore trouble ought to be spoken to and dealt with in great tenderness. But affection must not hinder, but promote faithfulness in our reproofs and admonitions. We must not, for fear of offending, suffer sins upon our brother. And it is very edifying when such as are noted in their profession, lay out themselves for the instruction and encouragement of others in the Lord's war; warning the unruly, supporting the weak, and comforting the feeble-minded. Yet through the sorruption of our nature, it is far easier to give good counsel than to take it. Extremely trying is the situation when Satan employs the saints godly friends to make them raise their hopes and acknowledge themselves hypocrites. The charge of hypocrisy is most frequently laid against the people of God, and is one of the hardest to be borne. But exceeding sinful is the indulgence of a censorious spirit: We must never judge of a man's state from a particular failing or from his outman's state from a particular failing or from his outward lot. Though tyrannical oppressors and other sinners be recompensed in this life, yet no man knows either love or hatred by all that is before him. What singular intimacy with God might saints enjoy if duly weaned and withdrawn from the things of this life! Were our tempers duly holy, even our dreams might be means of our noted followship with God. O how be means of our noted fellowship with God. O how men's spirits shrink under visits from the other world! What then must be the terrible majesty, infinite holiness, and equity of God himself! Insignificant and impure are all creatures in comparison of him. Mean are men while they live; and wretched in death if driven away in their sins. But for senseless, sinful, driven waymes to impace the window reachest and the residence of the dying worms to impeach the wisdom, goodness, or equity of JEHOVAH's dispensations of providence, or to plead their own wealth and excellency in his presence, How strange is it that is the boldest presumption. is the boldest presumption. How strange is it that amidst so many and remarkable warnings of an entrance into eternity, most men should live entirely unconcerned about it! And scarcely less strange that even good men should so often wrest God's oracles to serve their own humours. This oracle which Eliphaz heard gave ground to rebuke Job for his murmuring, but none to condemn him as a hypocrite.

CHAPTER V. Call now if there be indeed any that will answer this oracle in thy favour! And to which of the saints canst thou turn as an advocate for thy cause, or as an example of thy condition? 2. For the just judgment and holy jealousy of God shall dethe just judgment and noty jealousy of God shall destroy foolish and wicked men: and their own rage at Providence and envy of other men's happiness shall render them miserable. 3. Even when I have seen wicked men flourishing in apparently fixed prosperity, I have judged them unhappy, and predicted their fall, and quickly seen them and their families rendered miserable. 4. Their posterity are evened to reach miserable. 4. Their posterity are exposed to great dangers and calamities: they are oppressed and ruined in their lawsuits, or are openly punished, while there is none to deliver them. 5. The hungry vagabonds eat up their crop; and notwithstanding all the means used to secure it, or the danger to the taker, the sweeping scourge, and savage robber, such as the Chaldeans or Sabeans, carry off their whole substance and wealth. 6, 7. Affliction never comes to men without the just influence of God and the deserving influence of men's sin, even though it be altogether common and natural for men to meet with trouble.

in iniquity, and abandoned to gross impiety, shall not long flourish on the earth; but if, as born in it, a man be obstinate in gross wickedness, the flaming thunder-bolts of God's judgment shall fly aloft to destroy him. 3. Truly, therefore, were I in thy place, I would humbly address myself unto God and refer myself to his disposal. 9. I would refer myself to God, who works so many things, the nature, causes, and immediate ends of which we do not understand, and so is able to help or punish as he pleases: 10. To God, who waters the earth with rain, and who causes the fountains to spring, and rivulets to run along the streets and fields; II.

That by plentiful crops he may enrich and dignify men of low condition, and exalt those that mourn in sordid baseness and misery to an extended happiness and safety: 12. To God, who defeats the craftiest designs of subtle men to raise or enrich themselves, that it is not in their power to execute the schemes which they have most cunningly contrived: 13. Who makes their own devices to produce what they studied to avoid, and to hurry them, contrary to their expectation, into dreadful ruin. 14. So that when everything seems plain and prosperous, they suddenly stumble into mis-takes and misery; and in the very midst of their wisdom and felicity unexpected danger seizes upon them. 15. By which means God delivers those who fear his name from the open fury and from the treacherous flatteries and calumnies of these powerful oppressors. 16. That by observation and experience of this the poor and oppressed may be encouraged to hope in God for help and deliverance, and wicked men may be confounded and silenced.—17. And, moreover, God makes all the afflictions of his people to work remarkably for their afflictions of his people to work remarkably for their good; therefore never complain of his corrections, but esteem them as a distinguished favour. 18. For he not only makes us grieved and pained with trouble for our good, but quickly removes his rod and bestows his comforts.

19. When manifold troubles are inflicted on others thou shalt escape if thou refer thyself to God's disposal. Now he they own troubles are more they others thou snart escape u thou refer thyself to doublisposal. Nay, be thy own troubles as many as they will, they shall do thee no real hut. 20. REFLECTIONS.—The best of men quickly grow confident in their own mistakes. And it is the greatest discouragement to one in sore trouble to find no sain in his case or centiment.

Their own wickedness fearfully corrects them, and their backslidings ruin themselves, their families or records. corrects them, and their backshdings ruin themseives, their families, or property. It is stupid and heathenish to think that anything happens to us by chance. And the more we are acquainted with the sinfulness of our nature, we shall see the less reason to murmur at our nature, we shall see the less reason to murmur at our nafflictions. Under sore troubles it is necessary to search out and remove the sinful cause, and to turn all our fretful murmurs into humble supplications. How entertial murmurs into humble supplications. out and remove the sinful cause, and to turn all our fretful murmurs into humble supplications. Let us then attend to and profit by every truth we hear.

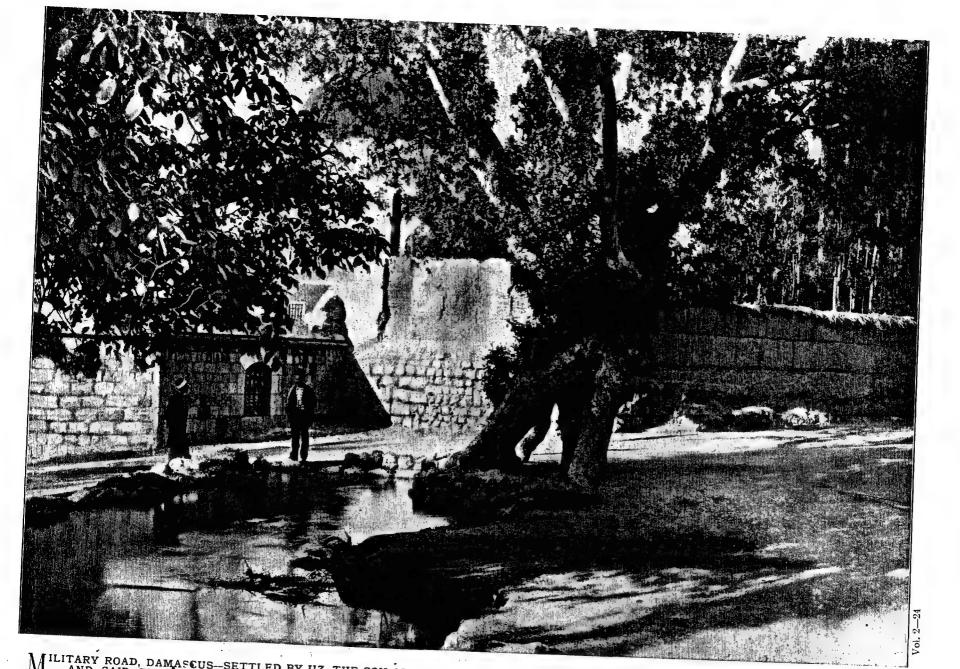

CHAPTER VI. But Job replied to Eliphaz: 2. O that my oppressive trouble, allotted me in God's indignation, and my extensive, unavoidable, and sinking calamity and sorrow, were but impartially and thoroughly weighed! 3. It would be found so heavy as to hinder and far surpass complaints: therefore are my words full of burning rage and tossing disquiet. 4. For grievous pains in my body, and impressions of God's wrath on my conscience, by their violence, quite dispirit my soul and waste my life. His terrible judgments shut me up on every side and set themselves as in battle array against me. 5. You do no more than brute beasts when you are easy and unconcerned only the results. when you are easy and unconcerned amidst your pros-perity. But if these animals complain in their distress, why should I be hindered? 6. Can ever such empty and unsavoury discourse as yours, without any seasoning of grace, prudence, and moderation, be either acceptable or edifying to one in such distress! 7. Those grievous afflictions, which I was once afraid to touch, must now in anguish endure; and yet I have nothing afforded me for comfort but your loathsome and empty discourses. 8. O that God would quickly fulfil my request for death, and grant me that which I earnestly hope and long for! 9. Even that, without leaving me to languish in this miserable condition, he would, with one effectual stroke, put an end to my present life. Io. The near views of this would comfort my spirit and strengthen me to endure the severest pains; to obtain this I would gladly endure what he pleases; as I am conscious that I have not hypocritically denied, disregarded, or concealed his truths. II. My strength is so spent that I can neither hold out nor expect recovery. I neither have nor hope for comfort in this life that I should desire it; nor do I apprehend any hurt in death that I should fear it. 12. My strength is quite incapable of bearing such troubles; nor can I but feel their terrible pressure. 13. And though I cannot deliver myself, am I therefore destitute of solid reason and true viters? However I have not I have not a solid. reason and true virtue? Have not I the testimony of a good conscience? Do not I know my own integrity, and the nature and degree of my sufferings, better than you?

14. Surely he who is in distress should meet with pity and compassion! and he who, instead of pitying a friend under great affliction, censures and re-proaches him, shows that he has not the true fear of God, and is in a fair way to apostatize from his service. God, and is in a rair way to apostatize from his service. 15-20. My dearest friends promised me help and comfort; but failed me in a time of need; as torrents, which in winter make a great noise, and run with a violent stream when the melted ice and snow fall thick into them; but in the summer, when water is much needed in these hot and parched countries, are quite dried up;

the water is so diverted into other channels, exhausted by the dry desert, or exhaled into the empty air, that by the dry desert, or exhalted into the empty air, inactione can scarcely tell where they ran: and the Arabian travellers who expected to refresh themselves with the water find themselves shamefully and miserably disappointed. 21. Just so are ye deceitfully disappointing me in my adversity, when I most need your help. Ing me in my adversity, when I most need your help, Instead of comforting me, you, seeing my distress, shrink from me, as if you were afraid I should prove burdensome or disgraceful to you. 22, 23. But since I never asked aught of you for either my subsistence or deliverance, can you not afford me a few comfortable words! 24. If you can convince me of any mistake, I shall submit, cease my complaints, and hearken to your submit, cease my complaints, and hearken to your counsels: 25. For solid arguments have a marvellous power to convince and persuade; but your reproofs are to no purpose, as they proceed wholly on mistakes.

26. To what purpose rail ye at words, or critically censure the speeches of a man desperate with trouble? sure the speeches of a man desperate with trouber 27. Mean ye to oppress me, when so helpless and destitute, with your bitter calumnies and revilings; and designedly to add to my misery? 28-30. Consider therefore my case and words more deliberately and impartially: you can easily detect me if I speak false or maintain a bad cause. Fairly try my cause over again, and you will find me innocent of the hypocrisy and wickedness which you have laid to my charge. Have wickedness which you have laid to my charge. Have I uttered aught that is false or wilfully wicked? or am I so stupid that I cannot distinguish that which is vain, false, or impious, from that which is true, gracious, and edifying

ILITARY ROAD, DAMASCUS—SETTLED BY UZ, THE SON OF ARALI, AND SAID BY THE ARABIAN HISTORIAN, MUGIR-ED-DIN-ELVI:1.]—Wetzstein, Oliphant thinks, clearly shows that the land of Uz, mentioned in cannot refer to Edom, but must have reference to a region near Damascus. While Josephus, in his Antiquities (i:6-4), states that the Arameans, whom the Greeks called the Syrians, were descended from Aram. Uz, who was a son of Aram settled Trachonitis and Damascus. The historian, Mugir-ed-din-el-Hambeli, in the chapter on the legends of the prophet, says: "Job came from El-Es Uz (?), and the Damascene province of Batanæa, which included Hauran, was his property." And Dr. Porter, one of the contributors to this Self-Interpreting Bible, says that he visited a town in the Hauran whose people claimed that Job was king of Batanæa. We give as illustrating this a view of the Military Road in Damascus.

C. -In travelling once across the Arabian desert my Arab guides had determined to spend the night at a well-known watering-place—a desert streamlet. Our water was exhausted. We had had none from early morning; we suffered in silent hope of a refreshing draught in the evening. We reached the spot weary and almost faint-ing.—It was dry! I can never forget the look of dismay-of blank despair, that in a moment was pictured may—of blank despair, that in a moment was pictured on every face. REFLECTIONS.—How insupportable is inward trouble, either felt or feared; and of all our evils none more intolerable than a sense of God's wrath! They in general, are partial judges of other men's troubles who live in ease and plenty themselves. And it adds greatly to afflictions to meet with nothing under them but uncharitable censures and insipid comforts from our Christian friends. It is difficult to keep either heart or lips aright under such complicated troubles. governed passion grows more violent when it meets with rebukes and checks. But it is most unbecoming with rebukes and checks. But it is most unbecoming when it gets into our very prayers to God, and by our folly turns them into sin. There is great need of always living faithful for God, since we know not how soon troubles may render us weary of our life. And those who are by grace prepared for another world, can see little in this to make them fond of staying in it.

But it is not selfchardening, but humility under touble But it is not self-hardening, but humility under trouble, that makes us ripe for deliverance. Alas! how often dejected spirits preach despair to themselves, and re-fuse to be comforted; forgetting how God can strengthen or recover for his own glory as he pleases! It is a mercy then to have wisdom and grace that will remain with us in the very worst of times. Unjust, yea, impious, is the want of compassion to those who are under heavy afflictions. And it is bitter to find the friends on whom we depended prove faithless. created comforts commonly disappoint us, and become gall and wormwood when we come to have most need of their encouraging and supporting influence. Upright souls are averse to be a burden to their friends, And the importunity of want often provokes the abuse of the uncharitable. But how contrary to sense—to of the uncharitable. Dut now contrary to sense—to reason—to pity—to patience—to equity—to a desire after truth—do friends act when God makes them scourges to us! Truth is a mighty weapon when wielded by the weakest arm. And they who have truth on their side will never shun the light, but court inquiry; and nothing then can be more unreasonable than to refuse them a patient hearing.

CHAPTER VII. Is there not a warfare of trouble, and the set time thereof appointed, for wretched man upon earth? Are not his days fixed and determined, and full of toil and labour? 2. As a servant wearied with the toils of the day desires a place of refreshment, and as a hireling looks for the end and reward of his work, so I long for death, to deliver me from my miseries and bring me to my glorious reward. For I have now allotted me for my portion months of wretch-edness and vanity without any solid comfort; and in the night, when others rest from their sorrows, I can but restlessly increase mine. 4. I am scarcely laid but restlessly increase mine. 4. I am scarcely laid down on my bed when, through agony and pain, I wish to be up again; and I am continually tormented both in body and mind. 5. For my body is overspread with ulcers, filled with worms, and crusted over with scabs, which have made such clefts in my skin that I am become loathsome to myself. 6. My happy days have quickly run over in a moment and there is a more of the contract of have quickly run over in a moment, and there is no hope that I shall recover them. 7. Remember, 0 God, how short and unsubstantial my life is, though once it was pleasant; and when once dead, I shall 8. My friends shall never more see me in this mortal state. Thou dost but frown upon me and I vanish out of this world. 11. Since there is no hope that my condition will be better in this world, therefore I will give some vent to the extremity of my sorrow by complaining. 12. Am I so strong and unruly that nothing but such strong chains of affliction can tame, rule, or restrain me? 16. Either cease from afflicting me or from preserving me in life; for my days have no need to be made more miserable and fading than they are of themselves. 17. What is man that thou shouldes honour him so much as to contend with him, and set thyself against him in rendering him so miserable? And that thou shouldest visit him with new afflictions every morning, and try him with new strokes every moment? 19. If thou art so patient and kind to the generality of mankind, why wilt thou not turn away thy displeasure from me, and at least give me time to breathe? 20. I cannot satisfy thy justice for my sins, O thou Observer of men: yet why hast thou set me up as a mark for thy vengeance to shoot at and run against so that I am a burden to myself and to thee? 21. Why wilt thou not forgive me my sin, and at least releas me so far from its punishment that I may die? for it thou come not speedily to help me it will be too late.

REFLECTIONS.—Our life hath its bounds and form unalterably fixed by God's decree. But how short-lived and hard is the condition of mankind on earth! Surely then we ought to be humble, whose bodies are so vile, and our days so empty and short? And sweet must the heavenly rest be to those who get bodies are so vile, and our days so empty and short? And sweet must the heavenly rest be to those who get hither through so much tribulation. It is proper herefore to die with affections quite weaned from this world and set on things above. But if the saints' afflictions can be so terrible, so constant on earth, what must hell be to the wicked for evermore! How terble to be driven thither in our wickedness! to fall nto the hands of an angry God: The views then of our near approaching death ought to animate our conessions of sin, our cries for pardon of it. and deliverour near approaching death ought to animate our con-essions of sin, our cries for pardon of it, and deliver-ence from it. It is a mercy that the blood of Jesus Christ cleanses from all sin, the most unadvised and lesperate expostulations with God not excepted: and prinkled with this, we may cheerfully bid adieu to his valley of tears and sorrows.

CHAPTER VIII. Not without a mixture of misake, rage, and pride, Bildad replied, 2. How long filt thou outrageously pour forth what is dishonour-ble to God and unprohtable to men; and brutishly iolent, noisy, and presumptuous? 3. Can God, who as no reason to fear the displeasure or court the favour fany, wretchedly and wickedly deal unjustly with iten? 4. Suppose he has fearfully punished thy chilren for their wickedness; 5. Yet thy humble, speedy, and penitent supplication to him for mercy would meet ith due regard. 6. And wert thou thyself sincere in eart, and upright in conduct, he would, all of a suden, bestir himself to help thee, and restore thee and ny family to its wonted peace and prosperity. 7. Ind however low and contemptible thy condition is at the same of the better in our lot. And if he knows our 1949

And as you look on us as mere ignorant upstarts, carefully inquire of the most aged and best informed, and they will assure you that God never punished but for sin, and never rejected a penitent person. 11, 12. And that as rushes and flags without abundant moieture cuickly with a successive cuickly w without abundant moisture quickly wither of their own accord; 13, 14. So without true piety, and a real enjoyment of the divine favour, the highest professions of the divine favour the highest professions of the divine favour that the divine favour tha Joyment of the divine favour, the highest professions of religion, and the greatest prosperity and most extensive hopes of happiness, will quickly issue in apostasy, infamy, disappointment, and self-wrought wretchedness. 15. The wicked man may attempt to rely on his friends, family, or wealth, and may exert himself to the utmost to retain what he has but to no purpose. to the utmost to retain what he has, but to no purpose. 16. The external smiles of Providence may render his prosperity remarkable for a little time; and his family, prosperity remarkable for a little time; and his family, wealth, and honour may greatly flourish and increase.

17. He may appear deep-rooted amidst outward enjoyments; and, in height of glory and apparent stability, may vie with the loftiest buildings of marble.

18. But quickly shall his native soil swallow him up into ruin: and he and all that he had shall quickly disappear and be forgotten.

10. Such is the mad and unsubstantial joy of the wicked, and the issue of their flourishing prosperity; while others are exalted from meanness and poverty to fill their place in the world.

20. For —mark it as a certain and important truth—the mighty God will never despise, or loathe, or refuse to help mark it as a certain and important truth—the mighty God will never despise, or loathe, or refuse to help and comfort an upright saint; nor will he strengthen, support, or deliver evil-doers. 21, 22. integrity, it matters little though men esteem us as hypocrites. God often gives his people indirect hims of the kindness which he intends for them, by words of the kindness which he intends for them, by worth never intended for that purpose by the speakers. And the knowledge and experience of others ought carefully to be improved for our instruction and comfort. fully to be improved for our instruction and comfort. What a common sin among professors is hypocrisy and dissimulation! What a sad source of it is forgetfulness of God! But the hope of hypocrites will put the most fearful cheat upon themselves. Though it flour ishes awhile, it perishes at last. And the things of nature around us suggest the most important admonitions, did we but consider them aright. The most precious truths are often abused through the misapplication of them. to make the heart of the righteous sad. tion of them, to make the heart of the righteous sad, and the souls of the wicked to triumph. Let me there-tore never be a harsh judge of others, and never too mild with respect to myself. Let me never judge of people's character by their outward lot. It is not time, but the last judgment and eternity, that will reduce all things to apparent order.

CHAPTER IX. Immediately Job replied, 2. I know indeed that God is righteous, and that he ordinarily punishes the wicked and favours the godly. But what frail man can, in your sense, be just before God? 3. If God please to call him to a strict account he cannot answer for one of a thousand of his thoughts, words, or actions. 4. And while God is infinitely righteous, his knowledge, wisdom, and power are so umbounded, that it is impossible for any to harden himself in rebellion against him and peacefully prosper. 5-9. in rebellion against him and peacefully prosper. punishments, the most proud, powerful, and fierce helpers and avengers must yield to his influence, and confess their inability to relieve us. 14. How then can I, a poor, weak, unbefriended wretch, answer him in judgment; or choose, give sense to, and order my words in debating with him! 15. Though my case were ever so just, nothing would become me but to make humble supplications to my tremendous and make numble supplications to my trementious and omniscient Judge who contends with me. 16. And if he had graciously accepted my supplication, and even promised to grant the request of such a poor and wretched creature as I am, I could not believe it. 17. wretched creature as I am, I could not believe it. 17. Since, without my being conscious of any uncommon wickedness, he breaks me to pieces by a fiery whirlwind of his judgments, and multiplies my painful afflictions. 18. He allows me no interval from trouble, no ease under it, but fills me with the most tormenting troubles and hitter griefs. 19. Should I be inclined to dispute with him by force, lo! he is infinitely more powerful than I. Should I be inclined to cike him at law. who, higher than he, could be our judge, and law, who, higher than he, could be our judge. and appoint us a time or place of hearing? 20. Though I holiness would make me condemn myself: and though I be no hypocrite, my attempts to justify myself before him would prove me perverse. 21. Though I were ever so perfect I durst not, on my own consciousness, debate the matter with him, nor insist that my soul were really such in his view; but I would undervalue, disapprove, and loathe my practice before his infinite ess; and would rather lose my life than dare to contend with one of boundless majesty. 22. All that I have affirmed and insist upon is this important truth, that God, in sovereignty, fearfully afflicts the righteous as well as the wicked. 23. When the most fearful calamities fall upon and suddenly kill men, he often, calamities fall upon and suddenly kill men, he often, with seeming pleasure, for their trial grievously afflicts the most innocent. 24. Who but he prospers the wicked, and gives the earth to be possessed by wicked men, and ruled by blind judges, who, from ignorance, misinformation, bribery, or partiality, pass unrighteous decisions? 25, 26. I myself am an instance of his sovereign management. My days of prosperity have quickly passed away without substantial comfort; and my natural life, amidst inexpressible misery, posts on to an end. more swiftly than the boat of paper reeds is hurried down the rapid stream, or the hungry eagle' alights upon his prey. 27, 28. If I attempt to forget my calamities, lay aside my mournful looks, pluck up my spirits, and cause my face to shine with a smile, my tormenting pains and sorrows terrify my mind: and I find by avverigate that they. Of an unit part appears I find by experience that thou, O God, wilt not remove my trouble as if I were innocent. 29. I see that I shall be held and punished as one that is wicked shall be held and punished as one that is wicked—why then do I thus fatigue myself in vindicating my innocency? 30. Though I could wash myself by the most effectual vindications, and thoroughly purge my practice with purity itself, 31. Thou, O infinitely holy God, wouldst plunge me into depths of noisome afflictions and of filthy ulcers; and my discovered wickedtions and of filthy ulcers; and my discovered wicked-ness and manifest troubles should hold me forth as quite abominable: 32. For God is so infinitely above me that I cannot, dare not, enter into a debate or plea with him. 33. Neither, indeed, is any umpire or arbiter to be found who could order us to silence, or the found who could order us to silence, or the standard order. oblige us both to stand to his award. 34, 35. Ver. 33. [The Hebrew word translated 'daysman' signifies 'one who makes clear,' 'one who arbitrates it a matter. The general sense is plain enough, but the doctrinal point involved is whether Job can have had any reference to Christ, the great Mediator. There had any reterence to Christ, the great Mediator. Inere is a reading of great importance found in some early MSS. It would convert the clause into a prayer:—O that there was a daysmen between us! The latter part of the verse suggests the idea that Job must have formed some conception in his mind of one who having two natures, the divine and human, touches

REFLECTIONS.—O the infinite goodness of God!

And what is man, so mean, so sinful, that he should be mindful of him! How incapable of advancing a justifying righteousness before him! Dreadful is the case of those daylis and man who hades the right of the case of those daylis and man who hades the right of the case of those daylis and man who hades the right of the case of those daylis and man who hades the right of the case of those daylis and man who hades the right of the case of those daylis and man who hades the right of the case of the case of the case of the right of the case of th case of those devils and men who harden themselves against him. His excellencies are plainly marked in whose God is Jehovah! and inexpressibly miserable whose God is JEHOVAH; and mexpressing inserance his most powerful and proud opposers! In incontestable goodness he often afflicts the righteous and prospers the wicked. And it is hard to complain much of our troubles without mingling somewhat reproach of our troubles without mingling somewhat reproachful to God. Let therefore the thoughts of my own meanness, sinfulness, and mortality keep my mind low and silent before him. It is his mercy, not my merits, that must be my only plea. Conceit of my sinless perfection, and of the worth of my righteousness, will but manifest my ignorance of the spirituality of his law and of my own corruption. Let me always stand in awe of him and the power of his wrath. Let me tenderly pity such as are wounded in spirit, and earnestly derly pity such as are wounded in spirit, and earnestly pray for them, as they can sometimes scarcely pray for themselves. Let me always entertain kind and honourable thoughts of God; as hard thoughts of him are inlets to much sin and sorrow. But above all, let me bless him that Jesus Christ is the Mediator between himself and me, and that my soul is not under extreme anguish and disquiet. And while I walk in the light of the Lord, let me rejoice therein, but rejoice with trembling. Who knows what change a night or a day may bring forth!

CHAPTER X. My soul bursts asunder with reariness of being detained in the cords of natural life. wearness of being detained in the cords of natural me. I will therefore permit my complaints to vent themselves freely, be the issue what it will. I will speak fervently in the bitter anguish of my soul. 2. I will say to God, Do not condemn and punish me as a wicked man, but cause me to know for what sin or reason I am so peculiarly afflicted. 3. Is it either pleasant, profitable, or honourable to thee, or is it just and equal, that thou shouldst spoil me of all I had, and the load mannith to the story when I had mannith to t thus load me with tormenting troubles or that with an enraged mind thou shouldst contemn the work of thine hands as good for nothing but to be a spectacle thine hands as good for nothing but to be a spectacle of misery? or that, by thy providential dispensations, thou shouldst appear to confirm the thoughts or encourage the practices of the wicked? 4-6. Are thy views of my conduct and state short-sighted, biased, or malignant. Are thy days so short that thou must punish me in this sudden and severe manner all at the consecution. Are thy researches after truth tedious that thou shouldst thus by tortures attempt to force a confession of guilt from me? 7. Thou canst not but know that I am no hypocrite, and that if thou punish, none can deliver me from thy judgments. 8. By thy creating power I have been curiously and elaborately bound together with sinews; bound together in my whole both God and man, and brings them together so as to | frame: and wilt thou, as a raging lion, utterly tear me asunder and swallow me up? 9. Remember that thou, as my Potter, hast formed me out of the clay; and wilt thou, in this sudden and fearful manner, so quickly rethou, in this sudden and fearful manner, so quickly reduce me to dust by death? 10. Didst thou not, in the womb, purify my substance as milk, and curdle and compact the liquid matter of which my body was framed? 11. Didst thou not cover my inward parts with skin and flesh, and curiously fence and weave me together with bones and sinews? 12. Didst thou not cover my inward parts with skin and flesh, and curiously fence and weave me together with bones and sinews? 12. Didst thou not cover my me the extreme and continuous of life? together with bones and sinews? 12. Didst thou not grant me the entrance and continuance of life? And hath not thy providential care and kindness preserved me from dangers and death? 13. And, notwithstanding, hadst thou a secret purpose thus to afflict me?—I find, by experience, that it was then determined with thee, 14. That if I should sin, thou wouldst watch over me to punish me, without the least patience, pardon, or pity. 15. That if I should be wicked, fearful judgments should fall upon me; and though I should live holy and innocent, I should nevertheless be oppressed with trouble. I am full of confusion and shame on account of my uncommon circumstances; therefore look with pity on my inexpressible misery. sname on account or my uncommon circumstances; therefore look with pity on my inexpressible misery.

Wilt thou bring fresh plagues upon me as witnesses of thy continued displeasure? Wilt me as witnesses of thy continued displeasure? Wilt thou still afflict me more and more? Shall nothing but diverse forms and multitudes of trouble assault me? 18. Why then didst thou bring me out of the womb at all? Why did I not die in the womb, without ever being seen on this wretched earth? 19. Or die in the birth, that I might have been carried from the womb to the grave? 20. Shall not the momentary duration of my life quickly cease? Shall I not then be allowed a short reprieve from trouble. 21. 22. Before I go to a short reprieve from trouble, 21, 22. Ver. II. [The whole process of the growth of the human body is here described by a few graphic touches,

REFLECTIONS.—To be weary of life before God sends us our discharge, is to be unfaithful to the post which he hath given us to maintain. In suffering times we should inquire into their cause that we may answer their end: and chiefly plead for the removal of our sin and of the condemnation on account of it. But those and of the condemnation on account of it. But those who are awed by the majesty of God often attempt easing their mind in sinful resentments. And under extraordinary troubles it is hard to forbear impeaching the goodness or equity of God by sinful murmurings. The most humble prayers are often mingled with the most neevish and proud expostulations. Neither the most peevish and proud expostulations. Neutrer the views of his omniscient discernment of all our sins, nor the almighty power of his correcting hand, can awe souls into quiet submission. Nothing but the largest supplies of grace can bridle the tongue in such a case. But when God hides himself as a Saviour his work as a Maker and Preserver should lead us to admiration and thankfulness. When he changes his way towards us, we are to believe that he has reasons hid for it in his heart, which will be shortly manifested. Alas! how sin stares the best of men in the face when God lays them under heavy troubles! Happy are they whose iniquities are pardoned, and in whom the fruit of afflictions is to take away the sin that procured them. But if sins be great, troubles heavy, life and its comforts short, death and its darkness near, let us give ourselves unto prayer. Every trouble is a call from God; and every moment of reprieve from death is an opportunity to prepare for it.

CHAPTER XI. Then Zophar the Naamathite replied, 2. Dost thou think to stop our mouths with a multitude of words, or by thy talkativeness to persuade us thou art innocent?

3. Must no one confute suance us thou are innocented. 3. Must no one commet thy false allegations concerning thine own innocence or God's dispensations of providence? And when thou hast so insolently scoffed at God and thy friends, must Must no one confute hast so insolently scored at God and thy menus, must none expose thee to shame, by pointing forth thy wickedness? 4. Wilt thou dare pretend to God himself that thou art quite pure and unspotted in thy principles, and practice? 5. Truly my earnest wish is that he would fully and freely debate the cause with thee and confute thy mistakes: 6. And that he would thee, and confute thy mistakes; 6. And that he would show thee the hidden methods of his providence, and reasons of his wise counsels, which infinitely transcend thy conceptions, and make thee to know that thou hast deserved far more affliction than has been laid upon thee. 7. Darest thou pretend, by thy inquiries, fully to know the secrets of his providence, or the reasons of his procedure! 8, 9. Thou mayest sooner measure the height of heaven, or fathom the depth of hell, and describe the surfaces and boundaries of the earth and describe the surfaces and boundaries of the earth and 10. If he attack a person or family, and shut them sea. 10. If ne attack a person or family, and snut them up in chains or nets of affliction, or bring them to his public tribunal, who can resist or refute him; or cause him to restore them to liberty? II. For he knoweth the lovers of, and dealers in, falsehood and vanity. He exactly observes and understands what emptiness and wickedness takes place, however unimportant it appears to us, and thus hath reasons for inflicting trouble to be abusive and passionate in religious controvers; that men overlook. 12. Let then the dull and self-conceited pretender to knowledge, who just now spoke, be endued with solid wisdom; and let him who appears to the self-control of the se be endued with solid wisdom; and let him who appears as rude and blockish as an ass be formed into a man of understanding. 13. If thou art truly wise, forbear disputing; and in the exercise of faith and hearty bear disputing; and in the exercise of faith and hearty repentance, apply thyself to humble supplication. 14. Reform thyself and family from whatever wickedness thou hast indulged. 15. Thus shalt thou be quickly delivered from thy loathsome disease and lamentable condition, and be firmly established in holiness and happiness. 16. The greatness of thy prosperity shall make thee forget all thy present trouble as if it had never been. 17. The remainder of thy life shall be filled up with the most glorious and ever-increasing filled up with the most glorious and ever-increasing felicity. Thypresent labour, under confounding trouble, shall issue in a fresh, clear, and pleasant morning of prosperity. 18. Thy mind shall be quiet and free from terrors, in the well-grounded confidence of God's favour and protection. Thou shalt dig thy wells of protection of the protection of the security and prothing the security and favour and protection. Thou shalt dig thy wells of water, or intrench thyself for security, and nothing shall disturb thee or thine. 19. And whilst thou ari in perfect peace, without anything to disquiet thee, many, even of the great, shall humbly court thy favour and friendship. 20. But wicked men shall never enjoy the happiness they desire or expect; their refuge from the happiness they desire or expect; their refuge from, the happiness they desire or expect; their refuge from, help under, or escape out of misery is utterly perished. Their firmest hope of happiness is as the giving up of the ghost, a noisy puff of breath, all on a sudden leaving them miserable and desperate.

25 They grope in the dark without light, and cruel to deal harshly with them whose spirits the Lord has wounded. Harsh censures readily exceed the bounds of truth. Such as are forward in giving the lie to others are ordinarily too guilty of falsehood themselves; and none are more forward in making their appeals to God than they whose cause is bad. How little we know of God's unbounded excellencies, or of the mysteries of his wisdom and will! men often talk the mysteries of his wisdom and will then often tank well concerning them to serve a bad purpose. But surely it is very unreasonable to complainunder troubles, when we have not only a God of deep counsels and ansearchable perfections to deal with; but, in providence, have a mixture of undeserved mercy in the most severe afflictions we meet with. Men often proudly imagine they know much when they are amazingly ignorant: and the more ignorant they are, so are they the more unsettled and ungovernable. But in trouble there is unsettled and ungovernable. But in trouble there is need of a thorough reformation of ourselves and families. Yea, to have our nature changed, our heart lifted up to God in holy desires and self-dedication, and our practice rectified. And the most holy confidence towards God; holy composure in our own mind; comfortable reflection on troubles; and joyful expectation of peace, joy, and honour, attend upon sincere and gospel repentance. If God establish us we shall not fail; nor need we fear what all the powers of hell and earth can do against us. Though we may for a little suffer an eclipse, we shall at last, without spot, shine forth in the kingdom of our Father. If the anchor of our hope be fixed on the faithfulness of God, no storms our hope be fixed on the faithfulness of God, no storms can hurt or endanger our security.—But unavoidable misery awaits the impenitent; and if not before, the hope of the wicked always expires in death.

CHAPTER XII. To this Job replied, 2. No doubt you think yourselves the only men upon earth who understand divine things, by whose death all solid knowledge will be rooted out from the world.

3. But he was the weakest of mankind understand the solid transfer of the solid believe it, I, and even the weakest of mankind, understood all that you have said of God's infinite wisdom, has been the common lot of upright men to be made the butts of derision by their wicked neighbours. 5. The best of men, when reduced to the point of perish ing, are generally contemned and hissed at by those who wallow in worldly ease and affluence. 6. But it is certain that the most wicked and mischievous peris certain that the most wicked and mischievous persons often prosper remarkably in this world. 7, 8. The beasts and fowls which they live upon, or are served by, can teach you pretenders to wisdom this: the earth, that affords them her plentiful and delicious fruits; and the fishes of the sea, which gratify their appetites, plainly manifest this. 9, 10. And even the most stupid of mankind must know that this is ordered by the providence of God, who is the Creator, Preserver, and Governor of both animals and men. 11, 12. Cannot our mind distinguish truth from falsehood as ver, and Governor of both animals and men. 11, 12. Cannot our mind distinguish truth from falsehood as exactly as the palate can do sweet from bitter? And the older we grow the more wise we ought to become. 13. Much more with the eternal God is there wisdom to know all, and strength to do everything. He never mistakes in his conceptions, nor miscarries in his purposes. 14. Behold, he destroys cities (smilles persons) mistaces in his conceptions, nor miscarries in his pur-poses. 14. Behold, he destroys cities, families, persons, and things; and none can restore them. He shuts up men in prisons or troubles, and none can bring them out. 15. At one time he withholds rain, or restrains the springs, and the waters dry up. Anon he sends forth the rains and fountains with unbridled liberty forth the rains and fountains with unbridled liberty, and the torrents of water overturn the strongest banks 16. Nor is his wisdom inferior to his power. The sin of the deceiver, and the sufferings of the deceived, are both ordered by him to his glory. 17. He defeats the projects of the wisest statesmen, and infatuates the majesty and authority, and reduces them to slavery and imprisonment. 19. The most devout priests, or the noblest ministers of state, he renders captives; and overthrows the most powerful armies of warriors. 20. Eloquence, fidelity, and prudence, gained by long experience, are rendered quite unavailable for the protection of princes or kingdoms. 21. He renders the greatest princes contemptible, and the strongest persons or armies weak. 22. He brings to light the most power, and justice. 4. REFLECTIONS.—Nothing is more disgusting and offensive than proud boasting; and a high conceit of our own importance is extremely foolish and sinful; contempt is all that is ordinarily gained by it. No king so high but he can bring down; no politician so crafty or eloquent, but he can infatuate; no plot so well laid, but he can bring down; and plot so well laid, but he can be can infatuate; no plot so well laid, but he can doubte with frustrate; no nation so mighty, but he can destroy with his nod; no general so brave, but he can intimidate. Be thou wise, my soul, to observe these things; so shalt thou understand the loving-kindness of the Lord.

CHAPTER XIII. Behold, all these things I know from my own experience and observation, or have learned from others; whereby you may see that I need none of your instructions on these points. 3. It with God himself that I wish to debate my own 3. It is with God himsen that I wish to debate my own integrity, and to answer his objections against it; 4. For ye are all forgers of false doctrines and accusations against me; you unskilfully and unfaithfully prescribe bad remedies for my affliction, and misapply good ones. and oblige him by wronging me? 9. Would it be for your honour or advantage that he should narrowly examine your discourses, and the springs and motives of Do ye think that he will be deceived with your flatteries and high pretences to piety? 10. No; he will certainly, fearfully, and openly chastise you for your hypocritical attempts to gratifyhim bycondemning me.

11. Should not his infinite majesty, holiness, and awful justice make you afraid to deal unjustly, even on his behalf, or to speak rashly of his ways and counsels? 12. Ye yourselves are but mean worms, sprung out of 12. Ye yourselves are out mean worms, sprung out of the dust before him; and your boasted remonstrances on his behalf, and your bulwarks of arguments, are worthless and weak, as heaps of dirt or clay. 13. Keep silence therefore, and do not interrupt my speech; let me but speak out my mind, be the penal issue of it what it will. I4. I am so conscious of my integrity, that I must wonder why I suffer such enraging miseries, and am exposed to such evils; and I could risk all danger to obtain a thorough reasoning with God. I5. danger to obtain a thorough reasoning with God. 15. Lo! should he utterly cut me off, and not leave me the least glimmering of hope, I would, to the last gasp, maintain mine integrity. 16. Nay, I am confident that he himself, with whom no hypocrite dare lodge his appeal, will in due time vindicate me, preserve me in or deliver me from trouble; and save me with an everlasting salvation. 17. 18, Hear me then with care and attention: I have formed a process against myself, and digested what I have to say for myself; and I know that, in the issue, I shall be cleared from every charge of hypocrisy, and manifested a righteous person. 19. What impartial person dare charge me with hypocrisy, or can prove his point? If he could, I should be silent, die with shame, and be strangled with grief. But when it is otherwise, it is death to me to grief. But when it is otherwise, it is death to me to neglect my own just vindication. 20-22. Do thou, great Judge, remove thy oppressing rod from off me, and let not the overwhelming awe of thy majesty terrify and let not the overwhelming awe of thy majesty termy me: then will 1, in the most bold and free manner, debate my cause with thee. 23. What, and how many, O God, are those heinous sins which require such grievous punishments? Or if I am thus afflicted for some particular crime, cause me to know it. 24. Why shouldest thou in anger thus withhold thy favours and comforts? Why shouldest thou hold and treat me as an enemy to thee? 25. How canst thou find in thy heart so violently to toss and grievously persecute me, who am so mean, weak, and contemptible in thy sight? And what honour canst thou acquire by it? 26. Thou passest the most severe sentence against me; and by afflicting me with the most tormenting troubles, bring-est to my mind, and punishest me for, the crimes which were committed before I well knew what I did. 27. Thy fearful judgments compass me in so close and tormenting a manner that I cannot escape. They follow me at the very heels; the tokens of thy wrath are en-me at the very heels; the tokens of thy wrath are engraven on the very soles of my feet. 28 And under these my frail carcass gradually rots into death.

REFLECTIONS—Hot disputants generally magnify themselves and undervalue their opponents; and too seldom do they adhere to truth with proper exact.

too seldom do they adhere to truth with proper exactness. There is great need then to pray that the Lord ness. There is great need then to pray that the Lord would mortify our pride, and keep us from the way of lying; and so far as is for his glory, keep us out of temptation. Deliberate lying is of all things most infamous. But what insignificant physicians are all but Christ to a sin-sick or wrath-sick soul! It is singularly criminal to manage the cause of God in a wicked and deceitful manner. What men call plant for the care deceiful manner What men call pious frauds are with God impious cheats; and devout persecutions are but horrid profanations of his name. Strict will be the but horrid protanations of his name. Strict will be the scrutiny, and severe the rebukes of God, with respect to those found guilty of these things! No good intentions, no pious pretence, will avail at his awful har. Let us then stand in awe of his perfections. Never let us, who are so mean and mortal, dare to contenn or trample on our neighbour. Never let us dare to exhibit weak and carnal remonstrances on God's behalf. exhibit weak and carnal remonstrances on Got's pe-half. But how supporting is it under trouble to have the testimony of a good conscience! and it is relieving to get our minds vented in kindly complaints. It is glorious, in the extremity of trouble, to be strong in the faith, giving glory to God, and coming boldly to his throne of grace, to ask mercy, and obtain grace to the fatth, giving glory to God, and coming boldly to his throne of grace, to ask mercy, and obtain grace to help us in the time of need. But how awful is it to find the greatest saints mingling their passions with their prayers! Lord, what is man, even in his best estate, if left to himself! And what a hell on earth sin sometimes forms for even the children of God! Sins long before committed fall with an awful weight on long before committed fall with an awful weight on their conscience, and cause them to roar through disquiet of spirit. If then I find myself deserted of God; if I find my sins of youth remembered by him, and my present miscarriage, strictly animadverted upon; if I may myself wasting away under his heavy hand, let me never murmur at his dispensations. Let me, holding last his promise, believe him to be my friend area. never murmur at his dispensations. Let me, holding last his promise, believe him to be my friend, even when he puts on the appearance of an enemy. Let me when he puts on the appearance of an enemy. Let me firmly expect the performance of his promises, even when all the ways leading to it are seemingly shut up. Let me rejoice in the Lord when he hath left me nothing else; and in dying moments let me derive from him my ever-living consolation.

CHAPTER XIV. Man that is born of a poor, weak, frail woman, through whom he derives guilt, curses, corruptions, and infirmities, is of few days, and curses, corruptions, and innimities, is of few days, and so surfeited with troubles that he needs pity rather than a violent hand to cut him off. 2. He makes a sparkling and fair show for a few days or hours, and then is cut down by an untimely death, or gradually, and without substantial happiness, posts through age into the eternal state. 2. And wilt thou. O Good, debase the eternal state. 3. And wilt thou, O God, debase thyself to take notice of, frown on, or contend with such an insignificant creature, or to hale to thy tribunal such an insigning and creature, or to hate to thy tribunal and execute strict justice upon me! 4. How is it possible for such as are sinfully corrupted themselves to produce innocent children! Why then should I, who produce innocent children! Why then should I, who am by nature no worse than others, be so peculiarly punished? 5, 6. Since the period of every man's life is unalterably fixed by thy purpose and providence, why shouldest thou now torment, and not let me alone, till I have contentedly accomplished my appointed service, and obtained the wished-for evening of death? 7-12. And the rather since there is no hope that men once dead will revive into life like the stumps of old trees in a well-watered soil; but will lie crumbled into dust, and quite insensible, till the last day. that thou wouldest hide me in the state of the dead, and cover me with a vail, till this storm of thy wrath blow over! or set some limit of time and degree to thy wrath, and in pity remember me! 14. Then, how-ever impossible it be for men to rise from the dead beever impossible it be for men to rise from the dead be-fore the last day, I should patiently, all the days of my troublesome warfare, wait for my dying hour; and no less patiently wait for my glorious change at the resur-rection. 15. Then, in love to thy poor creature, thou shouldest by death call me to thy judgment-seat, and I should readily come: and at the resurrection thou shalt, in love to me, call me up from the grave, and I will 16. But now thou wrathfully observest all the steps of my life, and, as it were, greedily mark. est the smallest trips of my conduct in order to punish them. 17. The least of my sins of infirmity is as carefully preserved in thy remembrance against me as if it were a precious treasure and then have treasure and then were a precious treasure; and thou huntest after forged calumnies to add to my sin and punish me for it. 18, 19. But there is no more hope of men's recovery from death, or of me from this calamity, than that fallen mountains should raise themselves up, or removed rocks resume their place, or worn stones should grow again; or that which is carried away by a flood should be brought back and the devastations repaired. 20. None can resist thy deadly stroke, but must pass into eternity whenever thou requires. Thou were thinked. eternity whenever thou requirest. Thou wrathfully changest his countenance, spoilest his beauty, and expellest him as a leper from thy camp on earth. 21. And then whatever glory, power, or honour, or whatever glory, power, or honour, or whatever debasement, disgrace, or misery, his posterity meet with, he neither knows nor regards it. 22. But his body, after pains in death, shall corrupt in the grave; and his soul, imbittered in death, often removes to an external anguish in hell

REFLECTIONS.— If human life be so short, so sinful, and so wretched; if death and an awful eternity be so near; why should any be proud! Why unconcerned about spiritual, about eternal happiness! Why not live on that gracious God who hath a feeling of our cerned about spiritual, about eternal nappiness! why not live on that gracious God who hath a feeling of our infirmities; and look and long for that rest which remainesh for the people of God! Awful and awakening, though comfortable and heart-composing, are believing views of death and of the resurrection from the dead: and happy is the thought that while my body, as precious dust, sleeps in Jesus' arms of kindly care, my soul shall retire to sit with him on his throne, and there wait till my great, my last change come! If grace has changed my heart, death hath changed its nature to me: and the hope of a glorious resurrection is enough to support me under every human trouble. Everything around admonishes me of death: and nothing can resist it when God gives it the commission. Sharp are its pains and strange is the change it makes! It separates the chiefest friends! In view of it, to render me always content, let me maintain kind thoughts of God and a deep sense of my sin. And at last let it find me weared from this perishing world, disengaged from all but a God in Christ; and singing, O death, where is thy sting! O grave, where is thy vic-

REFLECTIONS.—Men too often hold fast the false principles which they have once imbibed; and it

Disputants often turn revilers rather than reasoners; and charge their opponents with things which they utterly abhor. nents with things which they utterly abhor. And none are more ready to indulge pride and self-conceit in themselves than those who rage against it in their neighbours! Old men often rather boast of their knowledge and wisdom than possess it. But surely it is a humbling sight to see men so corrupt in nature, so abominable in practice; and amazing that God should love any such, and deliver them from the pit of corrupt. abominable in practice; and amazing that God should love any such, and deliver them from the pit of corruption! In the study of true knowledge the experience and observation of others, as well as our own, are an excellent help. But how unbounded is the patience of God that can bear with wicked monsters so long! Yet little external happiness have they even in this world. ittle external happiness have they even in this world. Their seemingly purest prosperity is mingled with gall and wormwood. But if they are miserable in this world, which is their heaven, what must they be in death in indement in ball. death, in judgment, in hell!

CHAPTER XVI. To this Job replied, 2. Thou hast but repeated the senseless and tormenting jargon which I had heard before. Instead of comforting, you plague, harass, and tempt me to despair. 3. When wilt thou make an end of such idle and impertinent discourse? What has instigated and emboldened thee to answer me in this censorious scornful and perempt now, indeed, whether I boldly defend my innocence and pour forth my complaints, or whether I forbear, my frightful sores and griefs are nothing eased. 7. This terrible trouble has quite tired me out, and made my life a burden to me. While others murder my character and townest my my life them. others murder my character and torment my spirit, thou, by plagues and griefs, hast so wasted and disfigured my body that it testifies my great affliction, and is employed Meanwhile my pretended friends, who indeed implacably hate me, tear my reputation and torment my spirit with their speeches. REFLECTIONS.—Often much is said, and yet nothing to the purpose: and miserable comforters to resounded spirit are all duties, all friends, if God continue his frowns! Nothing but Jesus' blood—nothing but Jehovah's nercy—can grant any solid relief. Nay, alas! men are often most cruel and harsh when they ought to be most tender and compassionate: and those who riot in prosperity and ease seldom lay much to heart the case of their extremely distressed brethren. But though complicated and terrible are the troubles But though complicated and terrible are the troubles of saints in this world, unspeakably more so are the troubles of the wicked in hell, where there is nothing but remorse—but torment in all its horror! Happy of scourse? What has instigated and emboldened thee to answer me in this censorious, scornful, and peremptory manner? 4. Were your condition and mine exchanged I could easily insult you with a multitude of words, and deride you in a grave or scornful manner.

ILL ON JERUSALEM ROAD, DAMASCUS—THE TRADING POINT OF THE HAURAN WHERE JOB LIVED. [Job xvi:1.]—The traditions of the Arabs which make the Hauran in the neighborhood of Damascus, the home of Job, are not to be despised. In no part of the world have the native races undergone so little change as in this region. To this very day the descendants of the cotemporaries of Job, and perhaps his own, live on the same plains once occupied by their ancestors. This gives to the tradition that fixed the home of Job in the Hauran a very different value from what it would have in a country where the people were continually changing. Chrysostom, speaking of pilgrimages in his day, said: "Many pilgrims come from the ends of the earth to Arabia in order to seek for the dung hill on which Job lay, and with rapture to kiss the ground where he suffered." We give as illustrating this traditional history concerning the land of Uz a picture of the mill on the Jerusalem Road at Damascus.

1 Job appealeth from men to God. 6 The unmerciful dealing of men with the afflicted may astonish, but not discourage the righteous. 11 His hope is no longer in life, but in death.

6 He hath made me also a by-word of the people; and aforetime⁵ I was as a tabret.

8 Upright men shall be astonied at this, and the innocent shall stir up himself against the hypocrite

9 The righteous also shall *hold on his way;

My spirit is maimed, broken, and confounded with trouble; and my breath stinks, as in dying persons: the days of my life are thunderstruck, in syng persons: the tays or my me are thunderstruck, shortened, and debased nothing but the grave remains for me. 2. O God, do not my friends bitterly mock and deride me as a wicked hypocrite? And does not my mind so dwell and pore on their proud, insolent, and exasperating speeches that I cannot sleep nor mine eyes refrain from tears? 2. Come they give me undulsted refrain from tears? 3. Come then, give me undoubted assurance that thou wilt take my cause in hand and do me justice; or give me an impartial man like myself, who in thy stead shall debate the matter with me. 4. For as for these my friends, thou hast withheld from them a common capacity to understand thy providential dispensations, therefore they can never be honoured to judge my plea. 5. He who flatters friends in their wickedness because of their prosperity, or who manifestic makes a present of them his posterity shall price festly makes a prey of them, his posterity shall pine away in disappointment and misery. 6. Alas! both God and my friends now combine to expose me to the common contempt of the people, though lately I was their darling and the matter of their praise. 7. My eyes are rendered dim, and my mmd stupified with grief, and my body is wasted to a skeleton. 8. Upright saints in after-times shall be astonished at the sovereign dispensations of God, and the cruel abuse of sovereigh dispensations of God, and the cruel abuse of my friends, with respect to me; and shall be excited to the utmost detestation of hypocrites who uncharitably censure the afflicted. 9. Ver. 3. ['Lay down now, be bondsman (or surety) for me with thyself; who else should furnish surety to me?', This is a very remarkable passage. God is conceived of by Job in a double capacity; as a judge, who tries and condemns Job for his sins, and as a bonds tries and condemns Job for his sins, and as a bondsman or surety, who takes the place of the guilty, and pledges himself for him. It would seem that Job was enabled by faith to look to Christ, the great Saviour

I am his jesting-stock among them.' Heath translates it prodigy, and Good translates it dotard. C.—'And I became as one in whose face they spit; that is, an utter abomination. REFLECTIONS.—Happy are those who have spiritual breath which cannot corrupt; life that can never fail; who have their portion in eternal blessed ness, and are ready for their grave! If cruel friends exasperate my spirit and drive sleep from mine eyes, of all my hope and the source of all my loys. God can easily infatuate the wisest when they abuse his gifts. And it is mad to pursue honour and advancements by sinful methods, particularly in employing the wisdom which he has given against his cause and interest. which he has given against his cause and interest. Vain is the inconstant applause of men. While we are great the world admire us; but when depressed and poor they contemn or abhor us. But though we see things in providence which we cannot account for, we faithful to God we must be zealous for his cause and take part with his oppressed people, whose bitterest enemies are usually formal hypocrites. They who are through faith brought into the way, Jesus Christ, and a course of the state of the and a course of holiness, strive not to faint or fail; nay, even difficulties and opposition quicken them. hair, nay, even difficulties and opposition quicken them. Many great pretenders to wisdom can give no profitable instructions in a day of trial; and empty are the promises and vain the hopes of carnal minds. How debasing to proud men are death and the grave! And even good men are apt to despair of that which God and he that hath 'clean hands "shall be stronger and stronger.

4 He teareth himself in his anger: shall the earth be forsaken for thee? and shall the rock be removed out of his place?

5 Yea,3 thed light of the wicked shall be put out, and the spark of his fire shall not shine.

- 6 The light shall be dark in his tabernacle. and his candle4 shall be put out with him.
- 7 The steps of his strength shall be straitened, and his gown counsel shall cast him down.
- 8 For he is cast into a net by his own feet, and he walketh upon a snare.5
- 9 The igin shall take him by the heel, and the robber shall prevail against him.
- 10 The snare is laid for him in the ground, and a trap for him in the way.
- 11 Terrors' shall make him afraid on every side, and shall drive him8 to his feet.9
- 12 His strength shall be "hunger-bitten, and destruction shall be ready at his side.
- 13 It shall devour the ¹strength² of his skin: even the first-born of death shall devour his strength.
- 14 Hiso confidence shall be rooted out of his tabernacle, and it shall bring him to the king of terrors.
 - 15 It^p shall dwell in his tabernacle, because really intends for them. Happy are they who rest in Christ here—they shall rest in death and in heaven for ever and ever!

CHAPTER XVIII. In no small heat of spirit Bildad replied, 2. How long wilt thou cast forth such confused, double-meaning, and unintelligible words, as if you wanted to entrap us? Declare plainly what you intend, and after that we shall deliver our minds with the utmost clearness, freedom, and boldness. 3. For to what purpose is it to talk with one who looks upon us as a company of dull beasts, into whom nothing of wisdom can enter!

With impatient rage you tear and torment yourself.

Must God, to humour thee, suspend or cease his government of the world, and leave everything to chance: or must he alter his immutable counsels or the fixed laws of his providence?

5. But say what thou wilt, though the wicked man may prosper for a while, all his splendour and apparent happiness shall quickly come to an end. 6. The wealth and honour of his family shall be turned into misery, contempt, and sorrow, together with himself.
7. His bold and resolute attempts to increase or maintain his prosperity shall be unsuccessful and involve him in insurmountable difficulties, and his own devices shall 8. His own wiles prove the means of his overthrow. and works bring him into inextricable difficulty and and works oring him into inextricable dimedity and distress; and every step he takes in prosecution of his designs, or in the way of pleasing himself, is attended with perpetual danger and farther ensuares him. 9. While ruinous snares take hold of and entangle him, they who thirst for his blood, wealth, or honours shall prevail against him. 10. Even when he neither forevers to the is always in danger of some sudden prevail against him. Io. Even when he neither fore-sees nor fears it, he is always in danger of some sudden mischief. II. Unexpected and overturning terrors shall fearfully affright him on all hands and waste him away on his feet, while they make him to run from place to place for safety. 12. Sorrows shall insatiably, as with intense hunger, feed upon him, till his strength, wealth, and honour be entirely wasted; and nothing but prepared and terrible destruction shall everywhere attend him. 13. Rottenness, fearful affliction, and a miserable death shall consume his flesh and bones. 14. Whatever he relied upon for the support of himself and his family shall utterly fail him and hasten his unhappy death; while terrors, as a mighty king, shall drive him into the depths of hell. 15. Terrors, despair, and destruction shall dwell in his habitation, which he un-exemplary judgment, like that of Sodom, shall destroy it. 16. His whole estate, habitation, and family shall be irrecoverably ruined. 17. And the very name of him shall be buried in everlasting infamy and forgetfulness. 18. He shall be driven from his prosperity and life into misery and death, and chased out of the world as a nuisance into eternal woe. 19. None of his descendants or kindred shall long survive him to keep up his remembrance. 20. They, on every side, who hehold, and they who afterward read or hear of the fearful justice of God upon him, shall be astonished and terrified at it. 21. This, indeed, is a just description of the miserable condition of the wicked at last; and thus shall those who dishonour God be abased.

Ver. 4. [Bildad in the first member of the sentence addresses his friends, describing Job; in the second he addresses Job: 'Shall the earth be forsaken for thee?' shall God leave off the care of all his other works to attend to thy vain complaints, and anticipate the final judgment to gratify your sinful impatience? C. The meaning of the passage is:—Dost thou imagine that by thy vehement conduct, by which thou art become enraged against thyself, thou canst effect any change in the established divine order of the world? It is a divine law that sufferings are the punishments of sin; thou canst no more alter this than that at thy command, or for thy sake, the earth, which is appointed to be the habitation of man, will become desolate; or that a rock will remove from its place. P.]

Ver. 10. [Delitzsch translates as follows: 'The trap holdeth his heel fast, the noose bindeth him. His snare lieth hidden in the earth; his nets upon the path.' This brings out pretty clearly the sense of the passage.

P.]
Ver. 13. [First-born of death. Who or what is this? Some think it the pestilence, others famine, but neither seems entitled to this terrible pre-eminence. Is it not the destruction or desolation (ver. 12) 'ready at his side' that is (ver. 13) twice said to 'devour his strength?' The one act points to the same agent. How blessed the hope of that time when the great devourer shall devour no more, but death shall be swallowed up in victory! I Co. 15. 54. C.]

REFLECTIONS.—There is much wisdom in leaving off contention before it be meddled with; it so were never intended. They even torment themselves —their pride and passion proving hurtful to both soul and body. But to what terrible judgments of God, in time, in death, and chiefly in eternity, are the wicked exposed! Short-lived and unsubstantial is their prosperity, and heavy the curse that is upon them ! Being abandoned of God, Satan first ensnares and afterwards torments them. Agitated by their lusts they rush head-long into ruin; till death in all its stings and terrors devours them! Then friends, physicians, and all human supports are vain. Their glorious prosperity is quickly turned into everlasting shame and contempt.

CHAPTER XIX. Job replied, Will ye never cease tormenting my soul, and bruising me as in a mortar, with your senseless revilings! 3. Ye have too often wounded me with the vilest reproaches. Ye have been shamelessly obstinate in your rebukes and cruel usage of me. 4. If I indeed had been mistaken in my opinion or practice, I have sufficiently smarted for it in my own person and estate, and so am a fit object of pity rather than of your reproach. 5. If you will still insolently declaim against me, and allege my debasing calamities as a proof of my impiety, 6. Know that I am sensible that it is God who hath in this fearful manner cast me down from my prosperity, and compassed me about with unavoidable miseries. 7. And my case is the more pitiable, that while friends abuse my case is the more pitiable, that while friends abuse me with reproach, God, to whom I have repeatedly committed my cause, refuses to redress my wrongs or vindicate my innocency. 8. Nay, his plagues so surround me on every side that I can find no way of escape: and I am so overwhelmed with perplexity that I know not whither to turn myself. 9. He has deprived me of all my dignity, authority, wealth, and family. 10. In respect of children, wealth, honour, authority, and health, he has entirely destroyed me; and all my hopes of future comfort in this world he hath plucked up by 12. He has in the most violent and furious the roots. manner afflicted me, as if I had been one of his principal enemies. 13. Whole armies of troubles have, by his order, invaded me; and as with raised batteries so straitly besieged me, that not the smallest comfort I had could escape their fury. 14-16. While friends and neighbours are alienated from me, and refuse to do me happy death; while terrors, as a mighty king, shall drive him into the depths of hell. 15. Terrors, despair, and destruction shall dwell in his habitation, which he unjustly acquired; and thunder and lightning, or some justly acquired; and thunder and lightning, or some positors to stand for many times. This loose method of speaking seems, however, rather inconsistent with the unparalleled and necessary accuracy of Scripture, as a divine revelation. Is not the expression ten time. as a divine reversion. Is not the expression ten ames literally true? Job now had spoken five times (ch. 3. 1; 6, 1; 9, 1; 12, 1; 16, 1), and his friends five times (ch.

1; 6. 1; 9. 1; 12. 1; 16. 1), and his friends five times (ch. 4. 1; 8. 1; 11. 1; 15. 1; 18. 1), in all, ten times. C.]

Ver. 6. [Job's visitors had traced all his calamities to sins which, according to them, he had hypocritically concealed. Job, however, indignantly denies that in this respect he is guilty. He traces all his sufferings to God; he can assign no cause for them; he leaves the impression on the mind that he is hardly, if not unjustly, dealt with. Job's friends were unquestionably in error, and they were harsh and cruel: but Job himself was far and they were harsh and cruel; but Job himself was far from the truth. P.]

Ver. 22. [The meaning of this reproachful question is, that ob regarded his persecutors as usurping to themselves a judicial divine authority over him. They were at best only his equals; they were not infallible; they might be mistaken; they had no right therefore to condemn him. P.]

Ver. 25. [From the depth of his affliction and despair, so far as regards earthly happiness and even life, the faith of the patriarch rises clear and triumphant, and finds utterance in these noble words:—'And I know, my Redeemer (my judge and vindicator) liveth thow, my reducement (my junge and will save me), and (he is in existence; he knows, and will save me), and he will arise the last one (the final judge and disposer of all things) from (or over) the dust (of the grave, to call from it those who sleep, and to raise the mortal to

Ver. 26. [Yet in my flesh shall I see God. 'Worms' and 'body' are not in the original, so that we are not bound to contemplate them in the exposition. them, such as characterize the most ancient literature of the Shemitic race:—'And after my skin (after its decay—after death), thus destroyed (rent and torn by the ravages of my loathsome disease), and without my flesh (in a disembodied state, when my soul is freed from this vile body), I shall see God (I shall see him with my spirit); whom I shall behold for myself (for my good, for my vindication from the unjust and cruel accusations of those now before me), and mine eyes shall see him and no other (no accuser, no stranger, but my own redeeming God)—my reins consume within me (i.e. I languish and pine here for that glorious vision).' P.—Not another—not estranged as you, my friends, nor ashamed to call me brother, He I.

Ver. 29. [There is a threat implied in this verse. God, in whom Job trusts, and who will in the end vindicate him, will prove a judge to those who now persecute him.

ersecute him. P.J. REFLECTIONS. -Hard is the trial when inward vexation and outward reproach meet together; and distressing the situation when those who ought to comfort us, again and again reproach and disquiet us; and esus, again and again reproduct and disquict as, and co-pecially when men abuse us with revilings, and God shuts out our prayer, and loads us with trouble! But when God strikes a saint, almost every person and thing is ready to second his blow; and then the sparing of his relations becomes a heavier cross than the removal of them by death. It is hard to discern God's love and endeared affection amidst many and heavy strokes of endeared anection amidst many and heavy strokes of paternal wrath. But happy are those who, when earth is turned into a kind of hell to them, can by faith solace themselves with the views of a future judgment; and of being for ever with Jesus Christ—their Relation, their Husband, their Deliverer, their Lord! It is dangerous to persecute the saints while their Kinsman-Redeemer lives and sees and shall quickly judge the Redeemer lives and sees, and shall quickly judge the world. But here let me stand still, and with pleasure remark, that there is a Kinsman-Redeemer provided for fallen men; that he is a living and divine Redeemer; that I have a new-covenant interest in him, and know that I have it; that there will be a last day, when time wat ye may know to your cost that God vandicates mis own people and punishes their enemies.

The very children, and ignorant people about, following the example of the rest, despise me, and treat me with the most abusive language. 19. The very men whom I had trusted with my secrets, and who had received the most distinguished tokens of my affection, abhor and hate me. 20. I am wested with afflictions till I am most distinguished tokens of my affection, abhor and hate me. 20. I am wasted with afflictions till I am little more than skin and bone; I am bruised till the teeth have fallen out of my head; and I have scarcely left me a mouth to complain. 21. O my friends, have pity upon me, when God's afflicting hand has so grieven an avenging God? Why, as if unsatisfied with my external calamities, do ye cruelly torment my spirit?—23. O that my protestations of uprightness, and appeals to God, were in the most legible and indelible manner registered in a book of public records, for my vindication, and for the encouragement of other upright persons under sore troubles! 24. O that they were registered in the most indelible manner in some marble rock or pillar, to continue legible to all generations! 25. For, notwithstanding these present miseries, I by faith know, and am firmly persuaded, that Jesus Christ, my Kinsman-Redeemer, liveth, having life in himself; and shall victoriously stand as the last Adam, upon the dust of the earth, in his incarnation, resurrection, and appearance to judgment. 26. And though these vermin, bred or breeding in my afflicted body, should quickly devour the whole of it, yet even in this body, when fashioned like unto his glorious body, shall I see God in my nature. 27. 28. Ye should therefore say, Why do we persent the one in whom there is such coundress and strength. cute one in whom there is such soundness and strength cute one in whom there is such soundness and strength of faith, and who hath the right cause in the present debate? 29. Beware lest God punish your inhuman cruelty to me with some terrible judgments. CHAPTER XX. Interrupting Job, Zophar the Naamathite in no small fury replied, 2. My thoughts make me burn and swell with matter of refutation, and oblige me to answer; therefore, highly provoked with thy speech, I make haste to the dispute, as a person fully prepared. 3. I have indeed heard a most re-proachful answer to my own and my friend's, former speeches, but my heart enables me to answer in the most prudent and considerate manner. 4, 5. Knowest thou not, that all along from the creation the prosperity of a wicked man and hypocrite has been very short-lived and momentary. 6. His youthful and secret wickedness shall bring such distempers upon him as shall hasten him to his grave, and shall attend him to hell. 12-14. If he with great fondness and pleasure indulged himself in his wickedness, it shall prove most bitter, unwholesome, painful, and destructive to him in the fearful miseries attending it. 15. The riches which he has greedily and unjustly got into his possession, he shall be forced to restore with great shame and torment. God shall so torment him with trouble and anguish of mind that he shall be sick of them. 16. That which he has been so eager in getting shall bring upon him the most terrible, painful, and destructive judgments. 17. Never shall he enjoy the least real comfort in all his plenty of outward things.

1 Job showeth that even in the judgment of man he hath reason to be 1 400 showen that even in the juagment of man he hath reason to be grieved. 7 Sometimes the wicked do so prosper that they are tempted to despise God. 16 Sometimes their destruction is manifest. 23 The happy and unhappy are alike in death. 27 The judgment of the wicked is in another world.

REFLECTIONS.—Alas! the most confident and forward in a dispute are seldom in the right: and with such the kindest warning is interpreted into an affront, such the kindest warning is interpreted into an affront, and returned with insolence; and the dictates of passion pass for the arguments of reason. The truths of God are often, as here, excellently explained, but miserably applied. Short-lived is a wicked man's prosperity and a hypocrite's profession. If not in this life, sin and ruin shall in the next appear certainly inseparable. And the higher men tower in sinful prosperity, their fall into the pit of destruction shall be the more dreadful. What terrible consequences have the often unthought-of sins of youth! Bitter are the issues of those sins which are reckoned sweet; and inexpressible the loss of those which are reckoned gainful. Where God's curse lies there can be no real felicity. But dreadful shall it be to the wicked when all their dreams of happiness shall be disappointed, their secret sins revealed, and the wrath of God shall take an everlasting hold of them! Let the sound of destruction—terrible destruction—everlasting destruction, that is in my ears, drive me to Jesus Christ, and the everlasting redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of my sins, according to the riches of his grace.

CHAPTER XXI. Job immediately replied, 2. Instead of pretending to comfort me, patiently and attentively hear my speech. 3. Permit me freely to declare my mind without interrupting me; and when a have finished my pertinent reasoning mock on as long as you please. 4. I have made my appeal to God: as you please. 4 I have made my appeal to God; and had it been to man, I could not but be vexed to find myself thus interrupted, reproached, and abused. 5. To see in me a religious and upright man so fear-fully afflicted, might overwhelm you with the most confounding astonishment at the awfully dark providence of God, and at least make you willing to hold your peace while I speak. 6. For truly, when I think on it, I am filled with the most terrifying awe of his awful judgments. 7. But if wicked men always meet with such fearful calamitles as you have pretended, whence is it that many of them, for a long time, flour-ish in uncommon prosperity and power? 8. Nay, live to see their children, and children's children, settled and prosperous? 9. Their habitations and families live in peace and security, and are not loaded with any afflictions; 10. While their cattle are extremely healthful, prosperous, and fruitful, 11, 12. Their wives with the greatest ease bring forth multitudes of children, who employ themselves in nothing but carnal joy and mirth. employ themselves in nothing but carnal joy and mirth.

13. Even unto old age they spend their days in earthly prosperity and carnal induigence, and at last die very easily, without any sense of pain.

14, 15. Gratified and puffed up with their prosperity, they in the most daring manner testify their dislike and contempt of the knowledge, service, and worship of God.

16. It is God, however, not themselves, who renders them wealthy and powerful. Ver tay he is from metal into with them in their impiety; 17. But let facts speak for themselves. How often are wicked men's shining prosperity and honour extinguished by fearful judgments and justly merited destruction? How often does God, as by lot, distribute to them entangling bonds of trouble and sorrow in his anger? 18. How often are they of a sudden fearfully carried away before the sweeping whirlwinds of his awful judgments? 19.

How often are either wicked men's children or themselves rewarded with fearful punishments? 20. How often do wicked men on earth experience the distinguishing judgments and hot burning wrath of the Almighty? 21. And though their children should prosmignty? 21. And though their children should prosper, what pain, care, or pleasure can they have about their house and family when they are cut off by an early death? 22. Dare any of you pretend to teach God how to govern the world, and whom to prosper and whom nots or to prescribe rules by which he must which held or to prescribe rules by which he must judge men, who, even the highest, are in death but the food of worms? 23, 24. Some men, both good and bad, die in the very prime of their life, and height of their prosperity, and in a very easy manner. 25. Others die amidst torments of body and anguish of mind, with the property of their prosperity of the property out ever partaking of earthly happiness or pleasure:
26. They lie down together in the same condition in the grave, and the vermin make an equal prey of both; so that none can tell who is good or who is bad by any external events.

27. I can indeed easily foresee what you, in your reproachful speeches and imaginations, will think and say. 28. You will ask, What is become of my own once princely family and of the dwellings of my children? And if Providence hath not plainly of my children? And if Providence nam not planny marked us out for wicked by the fearful judgments which have befallen us? 29, 30. But cannot even the most common passenger tell you that they have observed that wicked men are often preserved, as in a served that wicked men are often preserved, as in a served that wicked men are often preserved, as in a served that wicked men are often preserved. served that wicked men are often preserved, as in a secret place, amidst destructive judgments, and are carried forth with pomp in the day of overflowing wrath, and the punishment of their crimes reserved for the other world? 31. Their power is often so great on earth that nobody dare reprove or can punish them for their crimes. 32. Nay, they are brought in pomp to the grave, and honourably and quietly rest in their tombs. 32 They sleep as quietly in their graves as tombs. 33. They sleep as quietly in their graves as the best; and all men, whether good or bad, by little and little follow them into that state of the dead, with out any visible difference betwirt them. 34. Why then wealthy and powerful. Yet far be it from me to join attempt ye to comfort me with unsubstantial hopes of 963

REFLECTIONS.—Those who are once engaged in head insults of the local best their way through want of in hot disputes often lose their way through want of attention to their opponents. But what a mercy it is that saints have a gracious God to complain to when their friends refuse to hear what they say, or to regard their distress! And though the present dispensations of Providence sometimes stagger the faith and hope of the best of men, the last judgment will make all clear and plain. What a certain fact, and often a sad stumb-ling-block to the godly, is the prosperity of wicked men! It often hardens them in presumptuous impiety to their own destruction; but it will never reconcile a tender saint to their manner of life. It entails upon themselves and families at last the greatest misery. And however different their lot on earth or the manner of ishment in hell shall be their final portion. Let therefore their heart, their counsel, their practice, be far from me. And while I adore the high wisdom of God in his providence, let me never comfort myself with vain words! Where there is no truth there can be no solid comfort.

CHAPTER XXII. Imagining that Job had accused God of injustice, in suffering the wicked to prosper and the righteous to be afflicted, Eliphaz, in great anger, replied, 2. Darest thou imagine that God is a gainer by our virtue, as we ourselves are, and so bound to reward us for it? 3. Can it add anything to his joy or profit that thou art ever so righteous and perfect? 4. Dost thou imagine that he corrects thee out of reverence to thee, or for fear thou shouldest hurt him? will be, for fear of thee, either punish thee or give thee an account of his conduct? 5. Are not thy own monstrous and unnumbered iniquities the true cause of thy strong and unumbered inquiries the true cause of thy fearful sufferings? 6. For without any just cause thou hast taken pledges from thy very brethren, and hast in the cruelest manner deprived the poor of their small remains of the preservatives of life. 7. Most inhumanly thou hast withheld from the weary and starving, the

9. Thou hast spoiled widows of their just property, and cruelly oppressed, broken, and crushed the orphans, depriving them of all their supports and comforts. 10. Therefore entangling troubles and dangers are every-where round about thee, and sudden fears and terrible judgments affright thee. II. Fearful troubles and per-plexities so overwhelm thee that thou hast neither a comfortable sense nor hope of relief left; and multi-tudes of afflictions have with violence burst forth upon thee. 12. Is not God higher in place and dignity than the loftiest stars which thou observest? 13, 14. But like an atheist, you seem to think that God cannot know, or doth not care, what is done upon earth, but merely amuses himself in walking round the heavens. 15. Yet it was he who granted them their whole prosperity. peated supplications; receive peace from him; and quietly submit to him by an unfeigned repentance. Thus shall all manner of blessings, temporal and eternal, come to thee. 22. Receive, and duly meditate on, the instructive revelations which he may be pleased to afford thee. 23. If by a true faith and sincere repentance thou turn to the Lord, thou shalt be again advanced to thy former honours and prosperity; and the punishment which thy sins have brought upon thee shall be removed far from thee and whatever belongs shall be removed far from thee and whatever belongs to thee. 24. Then shalt thou lay up gold, and fine gold, in such amazing plenty, and with such ease, as if they were the most common things. 25. For the all-sufficient and almighty God shall be thy portion and the protector of thy treasures; and thou shalt have astonishing heaps of silver. 26. Thou shalt delight thyself in the enjoyment of God's love and favour; and shalt with confidence and comfort present thyself at his throne of grace, and hope for his eternal felicity. his throne of grace, and hope for his eternal felicity. 27. With sweet pleasure shall he hear thy prayers; and thou shalt pay thy vows of gratitude to him with the warmest affection. 28. Whatever thou hast purposed shall be accomplished; and divine direction, success, and comfort shall attend all thy proceedings. 29. When wicked men around thee are distressed or destroyed thou shalt confidently expect honour and felicity; and God shall bring to eminent and extensive happiness the person who is cast down in his own eyes.

30 Nay, at thy request he shall marvellously deliver not only many innocents, but even the guitty, and their country, by means of thy prayers, piety, and virtue.

Ver. z. [Eliphaz charges Job with presumption. He accuses him of magnifying himself in the sight of God. His argument is to this effect:—"Can even a great man.

His argument is to this effect:- 'Can even a great man (such is the meaning of the Hebrew term) be profitable pose that thou art righteous, wouldst thou thus be conferring a favour on God? No; by righteousness a wise man is profitable to himself. But I affirm that wise man is profitable to himself. But I affirm that thou art not righteous, and that thou art injuring thyself by unrighteousness' (Wordsworth). P.]

Ver. 6. [This being a grievous and direct charge, it is probable that Job, in the midst of his charities which his friends cannot deny (ch. 29. 15; 31. 16-22), had, as a man of business, been careful of his rights, righteous eventing being to the root themselves frequently better. exacting being to the poor themselves frequently better than promiscuous and inconsiderate giving, and that Eliphaz now exaggerates this carefulness and justice into

Ver. 7. [A charge of inhospitality, one of the most rievous in the estimation of the Arabians and their

REFLECTIONS.—Nothing can be more absurd than to imagine that we can make God our debtor by anything which we can do. We have nothing good in us, or done by us, but what is God's gift. None are us, or done by us, but what is God's gift. None are too great for God to humble. And if he spare the wicked, it is not for fear of them, but in patient pity towards them. Even good men, from a pretended regard to God, are apt to charge their neighbour with things which he heartily abhors. But if God's greatness, omniscience, and equity should deter men from crimes, they should also deter us from unjustly charging our neighbour with them. He that condemns the righteeus is an abomination to the Lord. How tremendous are the judgments of Heaven, and happy they who can safely rejoice amidst them; or who, in a Christian manner, take warning from them! Through ignorance of and enmity against God, through neglect and contempt of his word, and through obstinate continuous in the contempt of the cont tinuance in sin, men lose the greatest blessings and incur the greatest evils. But oh the delight in God, to God? Thou seemest to think that God is thy incur the greatest evils. But oh the delight in God, debtor, on the ground of thy righteousness. But sup-ship with him, the satisfaction even in managing outward affairs, the safety in times of common calamity, and usefulness towards others—that knowledge of and peace with God, spiritual improvement of God's word, and sincere repentance do produce!

CHAPTER XXIII. Job replied, 2. Notwith-standing all your pretended advices and comforts, I have as much reason for bitter complaints as ever, and my sufferings far exceed my expressions of grief. 3. O that I were admitted into God's own immediate presence, and allowed to present myself before his judgment-seat! 4. I would, in an orderly manner, set the justice of my cause before him, and fully support it with arguments, vindicating myself, and confuting your reproachful allegations. 5. I would insist for his decision whether I be a hypocrite or not; and that he would show me plainly why he hath so afflicted me. 6. Would he employ his infinite power and majesty to bear me down? No; but would mercifully strengthen bear me down? No; but would mercitully strengthen and encourage me to plead with him. And suppose he should plead against me in the multitude of his strength, he certainly would lay no false charge against me, nor make any hostile attack upon me. 7. For at his throne of grace a righteous person, such as I am, may argue the matter with him; and by this means I should fully and for ever escape condemnation, being should fully and for ever escape condemnation, being should fully and for ever escape condemnation, being acquitted by him as my Judge. 8, 9. I have tried all methods to obtain a fair hearing for my cause before methods to obtain a fair hearing for my cause before him, but have not hitherto been able to procure it. 10. But he knows the integrity of my heart and life; and whenever I am tried at his bar I shall come off sufficiently vindicated; and it is to render me more holy and pure that he tries me in this furnace of affliction. II. I have always, in the most fixed and steady manner, followed his pattern and guidance. I have steadfastly observed his commandments without even

I have never apostatized from his doctrines nor precepts; and have more earnestly sought, more highly prized, more heartily delighted in, and more carefully stored up his words of revelation, than my necessary food, or most valuable and precious things. 13. But his purposes are un-changeable, and he immovably persists in afflicting me, and does whatever he pleases, without giving to any a reason for his conduct. 14. Whatever trouble he has intended for me he will inflict; and in his purposes and providential conduct there are many instances of deep mystery, of which, though both wise and just, we cannot see the reason. 15. In consideration of his infinite majesty and wondrous and infinite power, I am troubled at the tokens of his anger; and when I leisurely consider his hard dealings with me I am afraid of him. 16. For in his infinite power he hath quite broken and melted my heart with fiery tribulations; and I am in perpetual terror of his inflicting still heavier strokes. 17. For he keeps me still alive under these terrible troubles and perplexities, and refuses me the favour of dying by his fearful and confounding

How-ever men abuse us, God will not only deal in equity, but even in great mercy, with his people. And it is proper always to keep up kind and exalted thoughts of They who fly to him in distress shall find their spiritual strength increased by every application; and if he acquit us, we need neither fear nor care who con-If he acquires, we need neither rear nor care who con-deminus. But O what dark and perplexing nights of desertion and perplexity are God's choicest saints often afflicted with! Happy are those who, amidst all, cleave to his commandments, walk uprightly in his way, and feed daily by faith on his word! Their trials shall ussue to their lasting honour and advantage. But it is sad when the mystery of God's counsels, and the deep wisdom of them, the greatness of his power, and ordinary methods of providence, disquiet instead of composing our minds. Let him do what he will, he cannot but do right. However terrible he is in himself, in Christ he is infinitely engaging. Let us therefore always acquiesce in his works and delight in himself. There is no reason rashly to wish for death when God can so quickly render life a comfort to us and a service to his church.

CHAPTER XXIV. But if God always punishes the wicked in this world, as you pretend, why are not particular seasons of it fixed by him? And why do And why do not those who are best acquainted with him observe those days of judgment of his enemies? 2. Certain it is that in this world some are notoriously covetous and unjust, and even open robbers. 3. Toppress widows and fatherless children. 3. They cruelly oppress widows and fatheriess children. 4. They harass, terrify, or even imprison the meek, poor, and afflicted. 5. In the most unconcerned manner they carry on their oppressions, and by rapine and violence maintain themselves and families in the desert. 6. They reap fields and gather vintages not their own. 7, 8. They force from the poor whatever they have, till they reduce them to absolute misery, in a state similar to that of wild beasts. 9-II. While they inhumanly deprive infants of their provision, that the enslaved mothers may work, and deprive their poor underlings of the meanest necessaries of life, they force them to labour in the hardest services. 12. Those whom they have oppressed, wounded, or unjustly condemned, mightily cry to God for judgment against them; yet mightily cry to God for judgment against them; yet he punshes them not, even in the slightest manner.

13. They sin impudently in the face of the sun, and against the light of nature, conscience, and revelation: they do not approve, delight in, or observe God's laws; and if at any time they stumble on a good action they quickly give it over, however easy and reasonable.

14-17. Hating the light, robbers and unclean persons, in defiance of an all-seeing God, earnestly carry on their murder and whoredom in the night season.

18. their murder and whoredom in the night season. Lighter than froth, they rush on every opportunity of uncleanness or bloodshed; their inheritance is spent in the most accursed manner; and they quite disregard the management of the vineyards or other most profitable business. 19. After all the grave, in a quick and easy manner, consumes these notorious sinners. Their very mothers easily forget their death, it is apparently so pleasant. Rottenness shall be sweet to them. They do not become infamous in the world, but their crimes are quickly and altogether forgotten. 21, 22. They abuse barren women, injure widows, and 21, 22. They abuse barren women, injure widows, and with great activity, craft, and cruelty oppress everybody around. 23. And though men give them presents, that they may have their protection and friendship, they still watch for opportunities to injure these dependants. 24. After being exalted a while they come to their graves as seasonably in appearance, and as easily, as their neighbours. 25. But if you will insist that the wicked are always fearfully punished in this life, I dare challenge the whole world to find me the person who can disprove the facts which I have now stated.

N.B. Ver. 18-20, 23, 24, may be interpreted as a representation of the miserable state of wicked men representation of the miserable state of wicked men after all their prosperity.

Ver. 5. [The wild ass—intractable, untamable, re-joicing in its freedom—is an emblem of the nomad Ishmaelite of the Arabian desert. Such too as are poor, who are driven from settled habitations by oppression, seek a refuge in the wide and free desert. It is often the case in the present day that those who are ground down by the tyranny and avarice of Turkish rulers, desert their homes in the agricultural districts of eastern Syria, and escape to the wilderness. P.——Go they forth. Who? Not the poor (ver. 4), but the unjust oppressors described in ver. 2, 3, &c., whose work becomes the robber of the caravans in the wilderness. comes the robbery of the caravans in the wilderness, as it has continued downwards through all their generations. C.]

Ver. 18. [The general idea here is the quickness ith which the wicked man passes away. True he with which the wicked man passes away. True he may live to an old age; yet at length he must return to dust. There is no hope for him. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—There is no doubt but that all sin will be punished; and none can know either love or hatred by all that is before him in his outward lot. While the saints and poor, who are in the mind of God, are remarkably afflicted, the most daring sinners are often remarkably prosperous in this world. But the Lord has not forsaken the earth: he takes notice of every injury done to his children. And however long his patience may bear with the presumptuous insult of sinners to his character and government, he will resent their wickedness at last. Even when they are most secure they are least safe. Though their success promise them impunity a while, which they had marked for themselves in the day-time:2 they know not the light.

THEN answered Bildad the Shuhite, and said, 2 Dominion and fear are with him; he maketh peace in his high places.1

3 Is there any number of his armies? and dupon whom doth not his light arise?2

CHAPTER XXVI.

1 Job, reproving the nacharitable spirit of Bildad, 5 acknowledgeth the power of God to be infinite and unsearchable.

OUT Job answered and said,

2 How hast thou ahelped him that is without power? how savest thou the arm that hath no strength?

3 How hast bthou counselled him that hath no wisdom? and chow hast thou plentifully declared the thing as it is?

4 Tod whom hast thou uttered words? and whose spirit came from thee?

and though their crimes should be concealed on earth, they will be openly discovered at last and punished for ever. Amidst the perpetration of crimes terror often seizes them; but how much more in sharing the certain, the fearful, the eternal punishment of them!

CHAPTER XXV. Bildad replied, 2. To God belongs that supreme authority over all things in heaven and earth, and that infinite majesty which strikes every beholder into solemn awe. strikes every beholder into solemn awe. In perfect quietness and order he rules all the luminaries in the firmament, and all the angels and glorified saints above. Why then darest thou pretend to find fault with him? 3. His creatures are absolutely innumerable to us, and severy one shares of his light, his benefits of nature or grace;—why then contend with him? 4. And how then can a poor wretched man stand as righteous before God? And he that is born of a sinful woman be pure before him? 5. In his view the bright luminaries of heaven are spotted and dark. 6. How mean and vile then must the frail and dying children of a corrupted progenitor and federal head be in his sight!

progenitor and rederai nead De in his signit.

Ver. 6. [This closing speech of Bildad is beautiful and true, but it does not touch the point at issue. The friends had argued that Job was punished because of his sin—his sin was great, though concealed the state of the program therefore his punish. beneath a cloak of hypocrisy, therefore his punishment was great. In reply Job affirmed a great fact, namely, that the ungodly often live happily and prosperous; and from this he argues with conclusive force that punishment does not always overtake the single. sinner. Consequently the fact of his being greatly afflicted was no certain proof of his having grievously sinned. P. — Worm. This word rather signifies a maggat, a creature bred of corruption. C.]

REFLECTIONS.—After long and hot disputing, people often come to see that there was less difference between them than they thought. Job's friends were obliged to acknowledge that wicked persons might prosper for a time and Joh wordthet. prosper for a time, and Job owned that they would be destroyed at last. It were a great mercy for religious disputants to have their hearts always filled with awful thoughts of God and humble thoughts of themselves. But how infinite is the condescension of God to hold love hath the Father bestowed on us in thus sending forth his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, that we, sinful worms, might, through his blood, become the sons of God!

CHAPTER XXVI. To this Job, in a derisive manner, answered, 2, 3. To what purpose serve these hints, either to support the cause of the Almighty, or to direct him in his government of the world, or to comfort a dispirited and instruct an ignorant soul? Who can be a whit bettered by aught you have so confidently uttered, that is quite foreign to the point in hand? 4. Do you imagine that I need to be instructed in these points? or that you, as one inspired of God, can by such hints revive and refresh my spirit? 5. I myself can discourse to far better purpose concerning God. While terrible monsters, minerals, pearl, coral, and the like, are formed in the bottom of the sea or and the like, are formed in the bottom of the sea or heart of the earth, and fishes and animals on the surface of it, the departed ghosts tremble and travail in pain in the deep and dark regions of misery. 6. The whole state of the dead, whether of soul or body, is perfectly obvious to God's all-seeing eye; and all the depths and miseries of hell are perpetually visible to him. The expends the heaven over the convention 7. He spreads the heavens over the apparently empty regions of air; and so balances the earth by his power, that it hangs like a ball in the air supported by nothing. 8. He binds up large collections of water in the clouds (by which he covers his glory, and on which he rides in majesty) as in firm bags, till he please to make them distil in dew, rain, snow, or hail. 9. He conceals his own glorious abodes; he firmly fixes the visible heavens, and spreads his veiling collection of clouds over them, to conceal his glory and restrain the scorching beams of the sun. 10. Everywhere, while the revolutions of day and night continue, he has fixed the shores and boundaries of the sea, that, rage as it will, it cannot exceed them. II. The lofty mountains, which seem the supporting pillars of heaven, tremble and shake when he corrects men by earthquakes, thun-ders, or tempests. 12. By his power he tosses the sea into a terrible fury, and as it were divides it into ridges and mountainous billows; and by his wise government he again calms it at pleasure, and mortally wounds the fellowship with men, so mean, so loathsome! Let me never forget how Jehovah assumed my nature, and in it, for me, became a worm and no man; a reproach of men, and despised of the people! What manner of Milky Way and all their winding constellations. By his wind he clears up the sky; and his almighty power strikes prostrate the most direful and destructive mon-sters of sea or land. 14. Nay, behold, these are but the outlines and a very small parcel of his works. It is but very little that we either hear or know concerning him; but the thunder-like declarations of his prevailing, him; but the thunder-like declarations of his prevailing, his infinite excellency, who can comprehend?

Ver. 5. [The mighty dead (the giants of the antediluvian world, Ge. 6. 4) are laid open from below, and the (living) inhabitants thereof 'are naked before God.' C.—Job's object in this sublime speech is to show that his view of the power, wisdom, and goodness of God is far more comprehensive than that of Bilded. God's dominion is not confined to the heavens. Bildad. God's dominion is not confined to the heavens,

Bildad. God's dominion is not confined to the neavens, it extends to the grave, to the world of spirits:—in universal nature, in fact, Jehovah reigns supreme. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—Sometimes self-conceited persons may be ridiculed out of their notions when reasoning is not effectual: and in disputes much is ordinarily said that is not to the present purpose; and not the edification of their neighbour, but victory over him, is the great aim of the disputants. Little is it remembered, that not the displays of God's highness, but of But it is happy when disputes end in men's glorifying God with one mind and one mouth. The perfections of the Deity are plainly marked in all his works of nature and grace; and all things must be well done where God himself is the sole or principal agent. Let me therefore in all behold his hand, his face. If he conceal the glories of his throne from this lower world, let me walk by faith, not by sight. If he has garnished the heavens, let me set my affections on things above and not on things of the earth. If his perfections are God forbid that ever I should justify your opinions and censures, deny my own sincerity, and confess myself to be a hypocrite! 7. It is mine enemies and opposers whom God will condemn and punish as wicked. And indeed I could wish nothing worse to my greatest enemy and injurer than nothing worse to my greatest enemy and injurer than to be wicked. So much I detest it. 8. For what avails the firmest hopes of a hypocrite in all his covetously-gained prosperity, or even inward tranquillity of soul, when he comes to die? 9. Will God always hear his prayers in the time of trouble and death? 10. Or will he find comfort in God when the world affords none? or will he in prosperity, as well as in adversity, continue in the earnest worship and service of God?

with it. 18. They may build their houses as strong as they please, and settle their estates in the surest forms; but God will quickly shake them out of all, or render them useless to them. 19. REFLECTIONS.—Appeals to God ought to be necessary, deliberate, serious, and in matters of importance. Prevarication or concealment is as much jury before God as direct falsehood asserted. But how often our high praises of God are mingled with something unkindly and disparaging! Not our most solemn vows, but Jesus' blood and Spirit, must chiefly maintain our purity of conscience and integrity of life. while he enables to exercise a conscience void of offence towards God and men, we ought never to believe either devils or men suggesting that we are hypocrites. it is best to refute the calumnies cast upon us by living well. Miserable indeed are hypocrites, whose hopes will never be crowned with enjoyment, their prayers never accepted nor graciously answered, and whose religion is neither comfortable nor constant! And yet, alas! how many such, amidst a glare of profession, continue with hearts unrenewed! Miserable is the Miserable is the condition of the wicked, even at its best, in this life: and what then must it be in hell? When once dead, their riches strangely vanish, and even fall into the hands of the godly, whom they hated: nor is any habitation secure and lasting but that which is not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. And in the most alarming forms of death God often ushers wicked men into eternal fire.

CHAPTER XXVIII. No wonder that I cannot tell you the reasons why God punishes some wicked men in this world and not all, when, after all our researches, we have so scanty a knowledge of natural things. There are secret mines for the silver, and a country for gold, which men melt and refine. 2. And iron is, with art and labour, dragged from the dust, and stones are melted into brass; 3. The miners, in the most earnest and daring manner, dig till they have quite lost the light of day, and bring their ore from the dark caverns of the earth, where pestilential damps and other dangers often prove mortal. 4. While, with infinite labour, they drain off the springs that disturb them, they break into veins of metal about the bottom of mountains; and, unheeded by the men who walk above them, they wander in the dark bowels of the earth. 5, 6. While the surface of the ground produces herbs and corn for food to animals; lime, brimstone, and such other combustibles are found in its bowels: may, the most precious stones and gold in some parts of it. 7, 8. So mysterious are the passages of these miners that the most quick-sighted fowls never looked into them, and the most fierce and courageous animals never dared to enter them.

9. But the miners artfully cut their way through rocks of flint, and dig to the bottoms of mountains, to come at the precious metals.

10. They make passages for draining off the water that breaks in upon them, and cleave asunder the veins of ore, and earnestly discover the precious stones and metals. 11. They stop the springs from overflowing their mine, turning them another way, and bring up these precious gems or metals which had been long up in the heart of the earth. 12. But to find out solid wisdom, or obtain the knowledge of God's reasons in his providential conduct, is still more difficult.

13. God hath so disposed it that no man knows the order, method, or importance of his procedure and no man on earth can attain to it. 14. No search into the depths of the earth or sea can procure it. into the depths of the earth or sea can procure it. 15-19. Not all the precious metals or gems in the world can purchase it. 20, 21. No, not the most quick-sighted creatures on earth can point out a method to obtain it. 22. The solid consideration of death and hell are a proper introduction to true wisdom; and yet in death and damnation there are manifold instances of God's wise procedure which are not sufficiently comprehended in the reasons of them. 23-27. God alone—who is infinite in wisdom and knowledge, and who rules and governs all things for the Lest--who manages winds, waters, rains, and thunders in all their circumstances, degree, time, place, or form—properly understands the reasons of whatever he does, particularly his dealings with men. 28. But what he inculcates and bestows upon men as their proper wisdom is such a knowledge and filial awe of his unbounded excellencies, as makes them to flee to him as their only refuge and portion; and, hating everything sinful, to love him and keep his commandments.

Ver. I. [The general scope of this address on mining operations is well indicated by Delitzsch: - 'According to the most natural connection Job desires to show that the final lot of the rich man is well merited, because the treasures which he made the object of his because the treasures which he made the object of insavarice and pride, though ever so costly, are still earthly in their nature and origin.' It is interesting to inquire where Job got his knowledge of mining. There is monumental evidence that mining operations were carried on in the peninsula of Sinai long before the exodus. The remains of smelting furnaces, the dwellings of the miners, the temples they erected, and the works they undertook, may be seen on the spot to this day; and they are testimonies to the scientific acquire-ments and enterprising spirit of some great primeval nation. With these or kindred works Job must have REFLECTIONS.—Alas! how men rack their wits, and toil their members, to obtain riches, which, while enjoyed, are unsubstantial, and which quickly take to enjoyed, are unsubstantial, and which quickly take to themselves wings and fly away, as an eagle towards heaven! Why are we not more industrious in digging for Jesus' hidden treasures, which answer all things and endure for ever! Surely Jesus and his mysteries, Jesus and his grace, must be strangely mistaken when men can thus prefer created trifles and rarities of dust! But how great is that God where are qualled and But how great is that God whose eye overlooks all, whose power effects all whose purpose rules all things! Let me never dare to pry into his private counsels, whereby he regulates his conduct. Let me leave the secrets of other men's hearts and the deep mysteries of providence to the Lord. And let me and my children study what he has revealed to us as the standard of our faith and practice. Let us learn the wisdom which comes from above, which is pure and peaceable, manifested in fearing the Lord and departing from evil.

CHAPTER XXX.

1 Job's honour is turned into extreme contempt. 15 His prosperity into the deepest distress

BUT now they that are younger than I have me in derision, whose fathers I would have bdisdained to have set with the dogs of my 2flock.

CHAPTER XXIX. After another pause, Job proceeded in his spirited vindication of himself, saying, 2. O that God would re-establish me in my former prosperity of person, family, and estate, as in the days wherein he watched over and protected me! 3. When his blessing and favour directed and prospered me in his blessing and favour directed and prospered me in all my affairs, and made me to pass untouched through all the troubles and inconveniences of life, and the various dangers, difficulties, and calamities which befel others around me. 4. When I was in the days of my ripe prosperity, and had the authority, the oracles, and secrets of God with me; 5. When God Almighty continued so kind to and familiar with me, and my children and servants were round about me; 6. When whithersoever I turned myself I abounded in all sorts of the choicest blessings; 7. When I took my seat in the places of judicature and concourse, 8. The young men stood in the most profound awe of me, and the men stood in the most profound awe of me, and the aged stood up in reverence and ceased to speak. 9, 10. Nay, from a regard to my superior authority, princes, the most noble not excepted, refrained from speaking.

11. They who heard me judge in a cause pronounced me highly favoured of God, and richly endowed with his gifts and grace, and prayed for his distinguished blessings upon me: and they who observed my just procedure attested my pious, just, and blameless conversation; 12. Because I never failed to redress the grievances of poor, fatherless, and destitute persons who complained to me. 13. Many blessed me as the instrument of delivering them when they were upon the point of being ruined by false accusations; and I eaused the widow's heart to sing with joy for her great and unexpected deliverances, and the favours which I granted her. 14. In all my sentences I fixed my attention on what was just and upright: and the decisions I gave were an honour to me. 15. I instructed, directed, and assisted such as could not manage their I gave were an honour to me. own affairs; and was ever ready to help and comfort such as could not help themselves. 16. I was a kind steacher, provider, and protector to the poor; and carefully inquired into their circumstances, as well as into their difficult and obscure pleas. 17. By proper punishments and restraints I rendered the wicked incapable of oppressing, and forced them to restore that which they had violently extorted. 18. Then I vainly imagined that, after a long life of amazing prosperity, I should die quietly in my own house among my children and friends; 19. That my remarkable happiness should certainly continue, as I had every mean of preserving and securing it; 20. That the honour and respect which I had from others, and my abilities and powers, should still continue with me; 21, 22. That men should still regard my advices and decisions with the profoundest respect; 23. That they should always be exceedingly desirous to hear my opinion and judgment on a point; 24. That, though I carried myself familiarly towards them, they should still stand in awe, and carefully avoid everything which might deprive them of my favour; 25. And that I should still be regarded as their principal director in their conduct, and affectionate comforter under their troubles

CHAPLER XXX. But now, alas! the youths, who durst scarcely look me in the face, mock and deride me, even those whose infamous parents I would have disdained to have employed in attending my dogs, or in other of the vilest services; 2. Being indeed so m other of the vilest services; 2. Being indeed so lazy, listless, and weak, that it was in vain to employ them in anything, after they had lived so long abandoning themselves to wickedness; 3-8. Base and beggarly fellows, who, ashamed of their poverty, and to prevent the punishment of their wickedness, had fled into deserts; and there, like wild beasts, lived apon roots and herbs, and lodged in dens, caves, and bushes. 9. Heartily abhorring me, they disdain to come near me, unless it be contemp tously to spit in my face. II. Because God has deprived me of my my tace. 11. Decause God has deprived the of my authority, wealth, and honour, and has grievously afficted me, they take an unrestrained liberty in their insolent behaviour towards me. 12. They endeavour to obstruct all means of comfort and relief to me. They so disturb my mind that I know not what to do. Without having or needing any assistance, they in the most presumptuous manner increase my calamities. 14. With the most furious and destructive violence they assault me; and when God has deprived me of my substance, family and health, they insult me in the most noisy forms. 15. Terrors directed by God against me, seize upon me in the most violent and irresistible manner; and my abundant prosperity is quickly, in a moment, over and gone. 16. By reason of my terrible afflictions my courage and resolution are quite exhausted, and the powers of my soul so wasted that I can do nothing but melt into tears and faint away with grief. 17. In the night, when others rest, my bones are, as it were, pierced and bruised with pain; and the worms, terrors, and agonies that torment me never take rest. 18. N My foul sores render me like dust and ashes, and reduce me to the point of death. 20. When I present myself before thee, O God, and continue instant in the most fervent supplications, thou dost but contemn me. 21, 22. Acting as an implacable enemy to me, thou exercisest thy almighty power to destroy me. Thou liftest me up to the wind of thy judgment, and makest me to ride upon it as stubble driven to and fro. My body ride upon it as stubble driven to and fro. My body is consumed by the violence of my trouble; and my firmest things are made to reel as the waters of the sea tossed with a storm. 23. Truly by thy thus dealing with me I see that I need look for nothing but death and the grave, that common sanctuary of mankind.

24. And I hope God will neither exert his almighty power to receive me from the grave, regulating in my power to rescue me from the grave, nor let me in my power to rescue me from the grave, nor fet me in my passage cry out of pains, let friends entreat for my life as they will; nor use it to molest me there, but give me refreshing ease in the state of the dead. 25. Did not I always sympathize with others in their distress and poverty? And do not I now weep as one condemned to a period of trouble? Does not my soul, as a poor distressed object, pine away with grief? 26. For when I firmly expected great and lasting prosperity terrible miseries came upon me. 27. How insupportable are the inward torments of my body and the anguish of my soul! Days of fearful affliction have rushed upon me before I was aware. 28. I spend my days without any comfort; and sadness makes me quite unconcerned about light or any other agreeable object. My trouble forces me to cry out, be as many around me My trouble forces me to cry out, be as many around me as will. 29. and abuse the greatest and best, when Providence once frowns upon them. And it is hard for wounded spirits to bear up under complicated troubles, terrors of mind, loathsome and painful diseases of body, and frowns of God. But happy are they who can by faith take up the eternal enjoyment of God as a full balance to all the troubles which they can suffer on earth! Happy are they who have the testimony of a good conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity they have had their conversation in this world!

CHAPTER XXXI. Ver. 6. Let me be tried by an upright impartial judge, that God may acknowledge and approve mine integrity. 7, 8. If I have knowingly, willingly, and ordinarily wandered out of the way of my duty, have indulged my heart in covetousness or my duty, nave induged my neart in coverousness of lust, or my hands in bribery and injustice, let all that I have be bestowed on others, and my children, plants, and trees be rooted up. 9, 10. If I have been enticed to unclean.lust by any woman, or if I have watched for opportunities to defile my neighbour's bed, let my own wife be a slave and a whore to others. 26, 27. If I have beheld the sun or moon with any idolatrous regard, or have had any inward inclination to esteem them as deities, or have given them any external worship.

34. Did ever fear of men terrify me from candid confession of my sin or from any other duty? or if I have concealed my faults, let me be overwhelmed with the terror and contempt of men till I be ashamed to be seen. 35-37. O that I had but an impartial judge, and that my accuser would give me a written charge! I should prize it as an honour, since every article would then be proved false: I would, with undaunted courage and confidence of success, give a candid account of my past conduct, to see of what he would accuse me.

Ver. I. [Job was charged with the commission of secret sins. His friends alleged that he would not have been so heavily punished had he not been guilty of grievous offences. In reply Job reviews his whole conduct, both public and private. He enters into particulars so as to show that the charge preferred against him was entirely false. It may be noted that while Job indignantly repudiates the charge of hypocrisy, he is wanting in that humility which must ever characterize the true child of God. Paul boasted of his faith, and endurance, and labours; but he ascribed all his mark to the legal instruments in the cause, and he means that he would gladly affix his signature to ar-ticles of impeachment laid against him, in token of his desire to debate the question of his own integrity (Wordsworth). Job feels strong in the consciousness of his innocence. He has now put the three friends to of his innocence. He has now put the three friends to silence; and he makes a general appeal to any one who will hear him. He boldly appeals to God himself to try and judge him. Seeing only with human eye, comparing himself only with a human standard, Job forgets man's frail and guilty nature. P.]

in which inward corruption breaks forth among man-kind! And there is great need of purifying the heart, of solemn dedication to God, of watchfulness over both of solemn dedication to God, of watchfulness over both soul and senses, and of constant, awful, and engaging impressions of God, to promote a holy and circumspect life. It is highly honourable to be followers of those ancient patriarchs who through faith and patience inherited the promises. But, alas! that many things, by them held horrid and detestable, are now become common and fashionable!—What dangerous enemies to our souls are fleshly lusts! And they call for especial watchfulness. If we would keep our heart pure our eye must be single. However unexceptionable our outward conduct appear, there is a God who marks our secret sins; and no impurity of temper can consist with the enjoyment of him. Such as will lodge sin in with the enjoyment of him. Such as will lodge sin in their heart now must lodge in hell for ever. How rare truly honest men are in this world! None are more to be suspected of fraud than such as are full of talk in their worldly dealings. Honesty needs no varnish. The gains of covetousness, however secret, leave a blot in the sight of God, which nothing but Jesus' atoning blood can wash away. The fruits of injustice must either be restored or they will damn us: and they who are conscious of integrity never shun a trial. crying sin is adultery; and how damning!—Great humanity and tenderness is due to servants and the poor, who have the same Maker and God as ourselves: and who have the same Maker and God as otherwes: and there is great need of grace to wean our heart from this world and from every rival of God. It is a hard task to forgive injuries without reluctance. But to rejoice in the fall of an enemy is malicious and murderous. The greatest provocation will never justify our revenge. The greatest provocation will never justify our revenge.

Hypocritically to hide our sins is destructive to our souls. And it is very dangerous to be partakers with other men in their sins. Let us therefore avoid the fear of man, which causeth a snare. Let us never hear a good cause run down without vindicating it, nor see injustice committed without remonstrating against it. In all our conduct let us study to approve ourselves

CHAPTER XXXII. Ver. 1. He was resolutely bent to justify himself, let them say what they would.

2. He insisted too much upon his own vindication.

Yea, not without reflecting upon the severity of God. 8. Old men ought to instruct their inferiors in age in the matters of God. But I find that, whatever advan-tage old age may give for knowledge and experience, it is chiefly men's own rational soul, and the inspiring Spirit of God, which qualify them to apprehend the mysteries of religion and providence. 13. Lest you should think you have said all that needs to be said in the cause, and that God's immediate strokes upon Job the cause, and that God's immediate strokes upon Job are an evidence that he is a hypocrite.—14. Job hath given me no provocation to speak; nor will I use such weak reasoning and provoking language as you have done.—21. Do not expect that I should flatter you in your errors and mistakes out of respect to your age, gravity, or the like; for I am resolved to deal freely, slainly, and importable with your gravity, or the fike; for 1 am resolved to deal freely, plainly, and impartially with you.

Ver. I. [The first three verses of this chapter are introductory. They explain the appearance of the new speaker upon the scene. Elihu, as it appears, had heard the whole controversy—alike the charges brought against Job and his reply. He observed both the illogical reasoning and its effect. Job was confirmed in his high idea of his integrity, while the friends were silenced. Elihu waited to the end of the discussion in hopes of hearing something calculated to convince Job of his real error. It was in vain. He heard nothing. The three friends failed to reply to Job; and Job justified himself in the sight of God. P.]

Ver. 8. ['But the Spirit in man it is, and the inspiration of the Almighty, that giveth him understanding.' Whatever opinion may be entertained regarding the person and character of Elihu, there can be no doubt that he here lays claim to divine inspiration. He acknowledges that all wisdom must come from REFLECTIONS.—In angry disputes there is or-dinarily much to reprove on both sides. But when the disputants are warm they are loath to own that they have lost the cause. Yet it is much better to say nothing than to talk error and nonsense. When we have fault to find, it should be done before men, not behind their backs. A gracious heart is jealous for the honour of God, and cannot, unmoved, see him slighted. And it is highly commendable to show a holy indignation against sin and warmth in the cause of truth. In disputes it is proper that each should speak in his own order, and that each be animated by a true and discreet zeal for God. And it is extremely agreeable when great sense and courage are directed by great humility and modesty. In matters of doubt-ful disputation we ought to be diffident of our own judgment, and to be more swift to hear than to speak. Yet after we have given othersa long and patient hearing it is but reasonable that we should be heard in our And by-standers, who hear without prejudice, often see further into a dispute than those who have their minds blinded by passion. reignly in the disposal of knowledge or other gifts. Men may have rational souls and yet know little: but they ought to cultivate this distinguished privilege. All the wisdom of fallen men in spiritual matters is but darkness till the Spirit of God enlighten their mind.—And, alas! how often disputes are closed before the question be rightly stated or impartially handled! And hence the issue is so seldom a seeing eye to eye in the truth. They have therefore good right to speak who can set the cause of truth in a more convincing and striking light than had been formerly done. And they who speak for God ought to be earnest in their discourses, inflamed with zeal for his glory and the good of souls; and to be so impressed with his perfections and laws as to regard neither the fear nor the favour of men.

CHAPTER XXXIII. Ver. 3. I shall not speak from passion or prejudice, as others have done before me; but from a sincere desire of doing thee good, and in such a clear manner that thou mayest be fully conrinced of the truth of what I say. 4-6. I am a man like thyself, fit to reason with thee on equal terms, and inclined to plead the cause of God against thee. 7. There is nothing about me to terrify or torment thee. 8-11. Nor do I intend to charge thee with hypocrisy, but with uttering of self-justifying language, dishonourable to God, as if he had dealt more severely than was able to God, as if he had dealt more severely than was just with thee. 12, 13. Let thy former life be as holy and unblamable as it will, yet thou art certainly culpable in quarrelling with the dispensations of God, who is infinitely superior to thee in every respect, and accountable to none for his conduct. 14, 18. Nay, so dull are men that, when God takes repeated pains in dreams, visions, or the like, to instruct them effectually for their humiliation and eternal salvation, they do not for their humilation and eternal salvation, they do not take notice of, or do not understand, his meaning. 19-22. Hence, for their awakening to a proper attention, he severely afflicts them, till they are brought to the very point of death. 23, 24. If then, by the instruction of some faithful minister, and especially by the instruction of Jesus Christ, the unparalleled Angel and Interpreter of the new kingdom, the afflicted man be brought, not only to discern the equity of God in afflictine him but to discern, and by faith anply. Lesus? afflicting him, but to discern, and by faith apply, Jesus blessed righteousness to himself, God intimates to his soul a full and free redemption through that all-inclusive at one ment. 25,26. In consequence hereof not only the man's body and mind recover their wonted health and alacrity, but he is enabled, with boldness and success, to pour forth his requests before God, who allows him the comfortable sense and gracious reward of that righteousness imparted to or implanted in him. 27, 28. While God exactly observes, the man, all influenced by cordial gratitude, shall publicly confess his sinfulness of heart and life, and that the due reward of his deeds has never been rendered unto him; and shall profess his full assurance of faith, that God has re-deemed him by the mighty power of his Son's blood, and will bestow his fulness of grace and glory upon his own motives and form of address with those of the three friends who had preceded him. They spake ignorantly, bitterly, and reproachfully; Elihu, on the other hand, addresses Job in words of well-meaning kindness and sincerity. Delitzsch translates the verse 12 Yea, "surely God will not do wickedly, neither will the Almighty pervert judgment.

13 Who hath given him a charge over the earth? or who hath disposed the whole world?

14 If phe set his heart upon man, if he gather unto himself his spirit and his breath;

16 If now thou hast understanding, hear this; hearken to the voice of my words:

17 Shall even he that hateth right govern? and wilt thou condemn him that is most just?

18 Ist it fit to say to a king, Thou art wicked? and to princes, Ye are ungodly?

20 In va moment shall they die, and the people shall be troubled at midnight, and pass away: and the mighty shall be taken 9away without hand.1

21 For ahis eyes are upon the ways of man, and he seeth all his goings.

22 There is bno darkness, nor shadow of death, where the workers of iniquity may chide themselves.

23 For the will not lay upon man more than right, that he should enter into judgment with God.2

24 He shall break in pieces mighty men without number,3 and set others in their stead.

25 Therefore he 'knoweth' their works, and that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit.' It is also embodied in the statement, 'Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth.' P.]

Ver. 30. [This is a summary of God's gracious de sign in all the chastenings and afflictions which he sends upon his elect. It is to redeem them from sin's power. Elihu just develops the same principle which the apostle Paul enunciates; that 'all things work together for good to them that love God.' P.]

REFLECTIONS.—We ought seriously to hear out REFLECTIONS.—We ought seriously to hear out a discourse before we form a judgment on it. And they who speak for God ought to speak with great deliberation and plainness. Thos, who are in great trouble ought to be tenderly, as well as convincingly, dealt with. And yet a faithful testimony must be borne against the dishonours which we see or hear done to God by even the greatest of saints. In the rage of temptation or dispute, or in the depth of trouble, they often speak things very unadvisedly; and yet their words are apt to be taken in a worse sense than they meant them. To make us conceive aright of God's providence we must carefully keep in view his infinite greatness, sovereignty, grace, and wisdom. And there is great need to keep our heart with all diligence, that even in our dreams we may enjoy profitable fellowship with and instruction from God, which may humble our pride and secure the salvation of our soul. For God, at his pleasure, makes the most fearful changes upon the bodies or minds of men. But honourable to God and profitable to men are sanctified troubles. lead to Jesus and his word as our instructors; to Jesus and his blood as our atonement and ransom; to Jesus and his law as our way in which we must walk; in our grateful returns for his mercies. They render our sins b tter and heavy, and our deliverances admired, and resignate us to invite others to a share of his goodness. Ann often God brings men through great tribulation in a terrible manner, by earthquakes or the like, hurried to their comforts on earth as well as to their glories in heaven. Departures from God issue in ruin unless he recover us by grace. And so manifold are his admonitions that, if we perish, our ruin lies at our own door. The wiser men are, they are the more humble and willing to learn; and the more desirous to be undeceived if they have been mistaken.

CHAPTER XXXIV. Ver. 2. I appeal to you, O men of sense, and I beseech you seriously to consider what I say. 3. For the mind can judge of the truth or falsehood of doctrines, as well as the mouth can judge of the taste of food. 4. Let us, without any passion or prejudice, thoroughly examine this cause: 5, 6. For Job has uttered some very dangerous expressions in his own justification, as if he could not vindicate himself without accusing God of unjust severity towards him, 7, 8. Did ever a good man deride, not only his friends, but even his God, with such greeding the state of th ness and delight? Did ever a good man under trouble speak and act so like the wicked? 10-12. It is impossible that God can deny justice to any, or punish without cause, or forbear to reward men according to their deeds, either in this life or in that which is to 13-17. Without supposing him perfectly just he could never govern the world; and men are so far from being able to give him his charge or directions, that their existence and life depend wholly upon his mere good pleasure and bounty. 18, 19. If it be improper rudely to charge earthly princes with wickedness and impiety, how daring is it to accuse him who formed all mankind equally subject to his power and pleasure, and therefore regards the greatest no more than the least, and can never do anything unjust to gain their favour or to avoid their anger. 20. At his pleasure whole nations, in their midnight security, are into eternity; and the mightiest princes or warriors are, by his immediate influence, displaced from their station or deprived of their life. 21. His omniscient eye discerns enough in men for which he may justly punish them. 25. He takes a full and exact account of their works; and because they are wicked he rolls a night of destructive judgment upon them; and they are bruised, as in a mortar, under the weight of it. 26. He suddenly, and with shame, hisses away these eminent ones in the open view of unnumbered spectators. 27. Because of their manifest apostasy from and obstinate rebellion against him: 28. That he may encourage mean persons to apply to him for relief; and may graciously hear the plaintive cries of the poor and afflicted. 29. And if he give deliverance, rest, and comfort, none can make trouble. If he withhold his favourable smiles, none can procure help from him.

30. He also punishes wicked men, that their insolence may be controlled, and that their subjects may not be encouraged to imitate their impieties or be perpetually held in the fetters of tyranny and oppression. 31, 32.

Instead of quarrelling with God's afflictive providences, we should kindly submit to them, and with holy resolution to avoid it, beseech him to discover to us the sinful cause of them, however secret. 33. Has not God inflicted these troubles upon thee as a part of thy due reward, because thou hast grievously murmured against him? Since thou hast chosen what I never would, declare plainly thy reason for it.

Ver. 8. [Not as if Job had ever practically or intentionally taken part with these, but that his doctrines finally coincided with theirs, and rendered him a party to all their erroneous conclusions.—Note, How easily may any one, through oversight, be found in the sight of God walking with the very men whom, in his judgment and heart, he fancies that he most abhors! C.]

Ver. 32. Helitzsch translates, For one, indeed.

26 He striketh them as wicked men hin the open sight of others;

CHAPTER XXXV.

1 Comparison is not to be made with God, because our good or evidenment extend unto him. 9 Many cry in their afflictions, but are no. heard for want of faith.

LIHU spake moreover, and said,

2 Thinkest^a thou this to be right, that thou saidst. My righteousness is more than 'God's?

3 For thou saidst, What advantage will it be unto thee? and, What profit shall I have if I be cleansed from my sin?2

4 I will answer thee, and thy companions with thee.

5 Look unto the heavens, and see; and behold the clouds which are higher than thou.

6 If thou sinnest, what doest thou 'against him? or if thy transgressions be 5 multiplied, what doest thou unto him?

7 Iff thou be righteous, what givest thou him? or what receiveth he of thine hand?

8 Thy wickedness may hurt ga man as thou art, and thy righteousness may profit the son of man.

9 By reason of the multitude of oppressions they make the oppressed to cry; they cry out by reason of the arm of the mighty:6

10 But inone saith, Where is God my imaker, who 'giveth songs in the night;

11 Who "teacheth us more than the beasts of saith to God, I have been proud, I will not do evil; what I see not, show thou me; if I have done wrong, I will do it no more. This is given by Elihu as a will do it no more.' This is given by Elihu as a model confession. It is not directly urged upon Job; but indirectly it is recommended to his consideration.

Job was proud of his own integrity. To humble him, and bring him a suppliant to the throne of grace, was the object of all Job's afflictions. P.]

Ver. 36. ['O would that Job were proved to the extreme on account of his answers after the manner of evil men' (Delitzsch). The Hebrew word translated in the text 'my desire,' and in the margin 'my father,' expects to be from an Archic root and is agriculant. sppears to be from an Arabic root, and is equivalent to our expression 'O that.' It expresses an earnest sh or petition. The wish here is that Job's trials may continue until the whole controversy regarding his boasted uprightness be decided. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—Mutual assistance is necessary in searching out truth or convincing the mistaken. But often good men, in the heat of their spirit, speak worse than they mean; and reproach both themselves and their God, in speaking or acting like the profane world. Just views of God's perfections are requisite to prevent our sinful freedoms with him, or to render us penitent for them. The eye of God constantly ob-serves our hearts and ways. How foolish is it then to serves our hearts and ways. How foolish is it then to hide our sin! Rejection of his warnings, and obstinate disregard of his will, fill up men's iniquity. And they disregard of his will, int up men's iniquity. And they who will not be guided by his word shall be smitten with his rod of judgment: and quickly will he resent the groans of the poor and oppressed, and redress their grievances. What God gives to nations or persons none but himself can take from them. If a soul enjoy a sense of his favour through faith in Jesus, no accusations of sin, nor fears of death or hell, can any longer disturb him. And when God is our enemy the whole world cannot protect us. Let wicked men crouch as they will, and profess as they will, in order to obtain power, he can easily disappoint them in mercy to man-The more persons are humbled for sin the less they will complain of their sufferings; but, conscious of the depth of iniquity in their heart, and the spread of it in their life, will search out the cause, and turn from it to God. Humble confessions of our ignorance and crimes, earnest supplications for necessary instructions and supplies of grace, and holy resolutions to walk in his way, are necessary in all our dealings with God. To struggle with him who best knows how to manage us, and does all things well, is at once extremely foolish But, alas! how often the best of men and criminal. when left to their own passions under heavy troubles, practically take part with God's enemies, insult his friends, and obstinately murmur against himself! And it is then a distinguished kindness faithfully to reprove them, and to help them to see and be affected with their offence.

CHAPTER XXXV. Ver. 9-13. Many, under terrible troubles and inhuman oppressions, cry to God for relief, and for vengeance on their oppressors: but as their prayers are mingled with no faith in God or kind sense of his goodness, but merely forced from them by the pressure of their distress and the haughty violence of their oppressors, God pays no regard to them. Therefore, although thou complainest that he hath not, and despairest that he will ever appear for thy relief, yet he still attends to wisdom and equity in every disyet ne still attends to wisdom and equity mate and ear-nestly look for him; and remember that it is because there is nothing of this in thy carriage that God has thus severely afflicted thee: and because of thy excessive pride he quite disregards thy former prosperity, and overlooks thy present extremity of trouble. 16.
And it is owing to thy ignorance or thoughtlessness of this that so many foolish and wicked words have proceeded out of thy mouth.

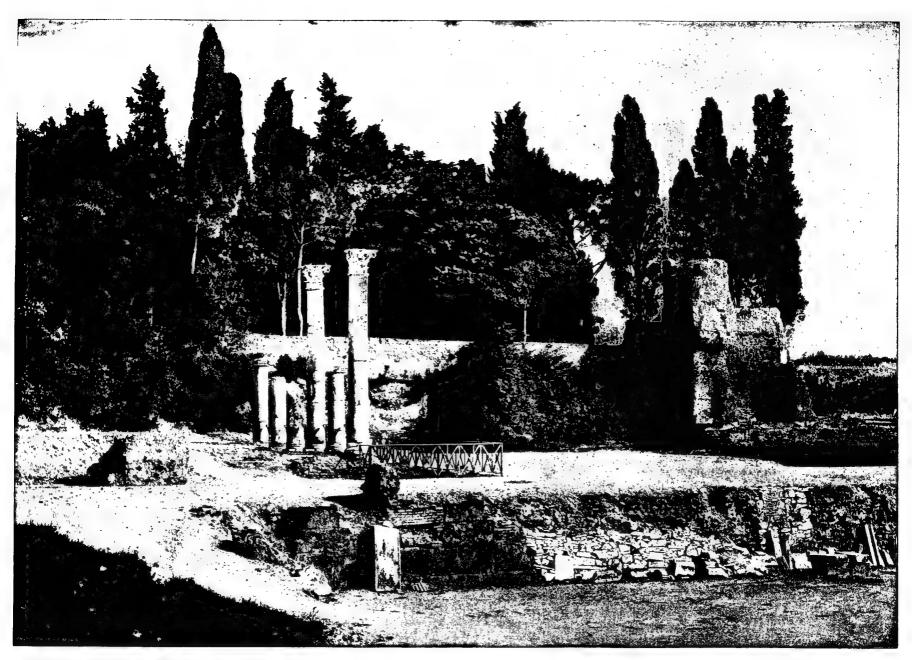

Ver. 10. [To glory in afflictions, and to render thanks for disappointments and persecutions, are undoubtedly beyond the power of 'flesh and blood,' but are the constant evidences and products of divine grace. See Ps. 42. 8; 77. 6; Ac. 5. 41; Ro. 5. 3; Ep. 5. 20. C.]

Ver. 16. ['The sense is, And now, because his (God's) warath hath not visited (the wicked), but sometimes leaves them unpunished in this world, and because he (God) does not clearly take cognizance of guilt, . . . therefore Job will open his mouth in vanity, and will multiply words, without knowledge' (Wordsworth). P.]

REFLECTIONS .- There is great need to be well rooted in the knowledge and faith of God's infinite reatness and goodness, in order to prevent many fatal mistakes in principle or practice. We can never make him our debtor. The best we do is unworthy of his notice; and the worst he dispenses to us is less than our iniquities deserve. Whatever trouble now attends his service, it will appear infinitely profitable at last. But many groan under their troubles who never show any humiliation for sin or desire after God. Yet irre-ligious poverty and suffering is, of all human miseries on earth, one of the most deplorable. It cannot be on earth, one of the most deplorable. It cannot be expected that such men's selfish prayers, without any regard to God or the good of their soul, should issue in help from him. While they are insensible of the most distinguishing mercies they enjoy, they cannot reasonably expect deliverance from the evils they feel, or the experience of those divine joys which overbalance every sorrow and pain. While our unhumbled hearts only murmur and groan under our troubles, it is a mercy to be denied the removal of them. But when God corrects his saints severely for their humiliation, Satan is ever ready to drive them to despair. greatness of their sufferings makes them to overlook their unbelief, impatience, and rashness; by which means they lose the comforts and defer the removal of them. It is only strong faith in God that can guide us aright through temptations and trouble. Despair of relief is as high a reflection upon his power and grace as impatience is on his goodness and wisdom. And if our troubles are not removed but increased, it becomes us to look well if we have not provoked God by our insolent behaviour under them.

IBRARY OF CÆSAR AUGUSTUS. [Job xxxv: 16.]—"He multiplieth words without knowledge." The above picture is of a scene on the Palatine hill, known as the Library of Cæsar Augustus. Reference is made in this sixteenth verse of the thirty-fifth chapter of Job to multiplying words without knowledge. It would be very materesting to go back through the centuries and look at the volumes in the library of Cæsar Augustus. We would find, however, by comparing his library with one of the modern period, that the difference between ancient books and modern books consists in the fact that ancient books, especially outside of the range of history, were made up of words without knowledge, while it is characteristic of the books of modern times, that the words they contain must be based upon accurate knowledge of the facts which they describe.

power and wisdom of God that he never despises any, however mean! 6. He will bestow no solid happiness upon wicked men, but will do justice to the humble, poor, and afflicted. 7. He never ceases his special care of the righteous; but sometimes advances them, however poor, to the highest stations; and continues, establishes, and exalts them therein. 8-10. Or if they be brought into and fixed in sore troubles, he by that means makes them to consider their ways, discern their sinfulness, and turn from it to himself. If their afflictions effect their reformation to piety and virtue, great and manifold shall be the blessings and comforts bestowed upon them here and hereafter. 12. But if, notwithstanding their troubles, they continue obstinate in wickedness, they shall be cut off by some fearful calamity, and shall perish in their ignorance, folly, and sin. 13. 14. Thus hypocrites heap up treasures of wrath for themselves; they neglect to implore God's help and deliverance in their troubles; therefore their life is early cut off, in a fearful storm of his wrath, by some exemplary judgment in death; and through eternity he reckons them with, and punishes them as, the cursed and abominable. 15. But he delivers the poor and humble in their affliction, and teaches them to know and practise their duty under it. 16. And hadst thou behaved thyself aright under thy pressures, he would even now have delivered thee from thy press ing and tormenting troubles into a state of freedom and affluence, in which there should be nothing to straiten thee; and that which fell from heaven upon thy table should be full of fatness. 17. But thou hast earnestly pleaded the cause of the wicked, and justified earnestry preaded the cause of the whered, and pushed their reproachful murmurings against the providence of God: therefore his just indignation has already seized thee, and holds thee fast in bonds of fearful affliction. 18, 19. Since he is manifesting his hot displeasure 18, 19. Since he is manifesting his not displeasure against thee, take heed lest he cut thee off without remedy; and then no ransom, however great, can redeem thy life again; nor will all the united power and virtue in the world be able to deliver thee, if God resolve to destroy thee. 20. Never wish for a period of awful judgments, in which multitudes of men are often destroyed amidst all their comforts and enjoyments. 21. Never give way to sinning, particularly to rash and intemperate speeches concerning God's providential procedure. Thus shalt thou be chosen in, and plucked out of, the furnace of affliction. But, alas! hitherto thou hast preferred rash censuring of God's ways to a patient bearing of thy afflictions. who can effectually deliver and exalt men; and none can cast down, scourge, instruct, or govern like him.

By such rains, thunder, and lightning, he punishes wicked men for their sins; and by rendering the earth fruitful, makes liberal and magnificent provision for his creatures. 32. By his hollow clouds he conceals the thundering flash as well as the bright and scorching sun, and restrains it by their interposing influence. 33. REFLECTIONS.—Plain and important speeches for God deserve the most fixed attention. Faithful souls are always zealous to vindicate God's dispensations from men's foolish and sinful aspersions; and truth and simplicity of speech always become such as profess themselves teachers of God's good ways. It is proper that we should always retain exalted thoughts of God: that he thinks none below his notice, however mean; countenances none of the wicked, however great; is always ready to redress the injured; takes a peculiar pleasure to protect those that are good; and brings special ruin on hypocrites, as the treacherous enemies of his government. If God exalt me to honour, let me exert myself for the welfare of mankind, and prepare for giving my account to him. If he afflict me, let me thankfully believe it done to discover my past sins, and to dispose me to receive his sanctifying instructions; fully persuaded that deliverance and com-fort shall appear whenever his merciful end is gained. If my deliverance be delayed, my continued sin is the cause. But if I am not bettered by his rod, let me fear, lest my stupidity and dissimulation should issue in the suffering of his everlasting judgment. In afflic-tion let me never be secure or make light of his stroke. Let me never hope to find out ways of my own to with-stand or avoid it. Let me never dare to persevere in self-vindication or quarrelling with God;—never dare to prescribe to him who is an absolute ruler, an incomparable teacher, and unexceptionably just in all his procedure; and with whom neither riches can bribe nor darkness conceal. In the glory of his works let me discern the perfections of his nature. If he makes the clouds fountains to the lower world and vails to the upper, let me view everything formed in them—rain, hail, snow, or thunder—as his workmanship. And while I am here, let me live by faith, not by sight. Whom, having not seen, let me love; and in whom, though now I see him not, let me rejoice with joy un-speakable and full of glory.

CHAPTER XXXVII. Just now my heart trembles, and is like to start out of its place, at the thought or hearing of the terrible thunder. 2. Hear attentively the roaring noise of Jehovah's voice, and the breathing murmur that proceeds from his lips. 3. By his providence he guides the forcible and straight darting of the thunderbolts along the whole extent of the sky, and makes the blaze of lightning to fly over the confines of the earth. 4. After the blazing flash of lightning the noise roars. He thunders with the voice of his majesty: nor will he restrain the storm and rain when the roaring of his thunder is heard. 5. By thundering the mighty God produces many marvellous effects: he does many things in nature which we cannot comprehend. 6. At his command the snow falls, as also the gentle showers and the deluging rains, the impetuous showers and tempestuous storms. By the winter storm he restrains men from labour, and keeps them within doors, that they may have opportunity to consider his works. 8. The very wild beasts are obliged to shut up themselves in their thickets and dens. 9. The whirlwind is generated in the moist clouds of the south as in a chamber; and cold proceed from the country north wind. To By God's will from the scattering north wind. Io. By God's will and appointment the frost is produced, and the rivers are congealed that they cannot flow. II. As by pouring down continual showers he wearieth the thick cloud, so his clear brightness dispels it; and by his light he disperses the transparent duskiness of the sky. 12. While the clouds are carried hither and thither at his pleasure, he himself, on every side, holds the reins of their motions, that he may accomplish his own purposes by them all over the world; 13. Whether it be for punishing the guilty by pestilential vapours and storms, or for rendering the earth fruitful, or for graciously rewarding his people with remarkable plenty. 14. Stop therefore thy censures of, and murmurings at, the dispensations of God's providence; seriously consider his wondrous works; and think how little thou understandest of the most obvious of them. 15. Knowest thou how God lays his orders or impresses his powerful influence upon them? or how he makes the rainbow-light of the transparent cloud to shine? 16. Canst thou tell how, in his marvellous wisdom, he hangs the clouds in the air, as if balanced by one 17. Dost thou know how thy garments wax warm when the earth is calmed by the southern sun and the pleasant gale? 18. Hast thou assisted him in clearing the sky after rain; and in making it to stand fast by its own strength, as a mirror, in which we may behold his admirable wisdom, power, goodness, and glory? 19. Teach us, if thou canst, how to speak to or of God: for by reason of his incomprehensible excellencies, and our great ignorance, we cannot speak of him to any purpose. 20. Nothing which I have said is worthy of his notice or answerable to the subject. If any attempt to describe his excellencies he will be quite confounded by their dazzling glory. 21. And just now men cannot look upon the bright shining of the sun in the sky when the wind has dispelled every cloud. 22. The godlike glancing sun shines clearly by the purifying north winds: and upon God is a robe of terrible majesty. 23. We cannot comprehend his essence, perfections, purposes, or works. His power indeed is infinite: but he will not afflict his people in strict judgment or severity of justice. 24. Men should therefore stand in awe of him and beware of quarrelling with his conduct; for he regards none who are wise in their own conceit, or who dare to contend with their Maker, or presume to censure his proceedings.

REFLECTIONS.—O how much of God is to be

CHAPTER XXXVIII. Ushered in by a terrible whirlwind, to make Job more humble and attentive, God himself next addressed him, saying, 2. Who art thou that hast sought to eclipse, misrepresent, and censure the wisdom and justice of my providence, by discourses proceeding from ignorance, mistake, inconsiderateness, and passion? 3. Now, according to thy proud challenges, prepare thyself to debate the cause with me; nay, to answer me a few plain questions; that convinced by these of the weakness of thy understanding, thou mayest perceive how incapable thou art of judging as to my secret counsels or mysterious providences. 4-7. If thou art so skilful as thou pretendest, tell me how I laid the foundations of the earth: how I planned and adjusted the whole form and boundaries of it: how, without any foundation to stand on, I settled it upon its own centre, and firmly connected all the parts of it, while angels, whom I had previously created to be my honorary guard, celebrated the wisdom, goodness, and power which I therein manifested! 8-11. Tell me how with banks, or even sand, I set bounds to the newly formed ocean, which often rages as if it would cover the earth, from which its waters were separated; how I covered it with thick mists and fogs, restraining its fury; how I made hollow places in the earth for it; and notwithstanding its furious raging, confined it in them! 12. Hast thou, before or since thy birth, governed the morning light, making it to observe its punctual time, and orderly to appear in its ever-varying place; 13. That it might suddenly spread itself over the whole hemisphere, that wicked men who rage in the night, being detected, might by condign punishment be restrained or cut off; 14. That the earth, as the wax beneath the seal, may put on a new form, and the things on it appear as its adorning garment; 15. And that by this light the wicked may be deprived of that success and comfort which they promised themselves in their crimes, and their tyrannical power may be repressed? 16. CHAPTER XXXIX.

God proceedeth to show his own power, and man's weakness and ignorance, by instances from the animal creation: 1 of the wild goats and hinds, 5 of the wild ass, 9 the unicorn, &c.

K NOWEST thou the time when the "wild goats" of the rock bring forth? or canst thou mark when the bhinds do calve?

2 Canst thou number the months that they fulfil? or knowest thou the time when they bottom of the ocean, or walked, as in state, through the the rain when the earth is sufficiently watered? 39-41. Canst thou provide food even for the most ravenous thing there? 17. Art thou fully acquainted with all the dark caverns and inmost parts of the earth: or with creatures, particularly for the lioness and her whelps, or for old lions incapable of leaving their dens; or for the whole nature and circumstances of death and the the young ravens when by their dams they are expelled grave, and of the eternal state? 18. Are the dimensions of the earth, with its whole substance and pro-from the nest?

Ver. I. [No notice is taken of the transition from Elihu, God visible in human form, to JEHOVAH invisible in the whirlwind or stormy cloud. To those who feel any difficulty in identifying Elihu (God himself, see Mat. I. 23) with JEHOVAH, it may be useful self, see Mat. 1. 23 with JEHOVAH, it may be useful to examine the appearance of JEHOVAH to Abraham, and his familiar converse with him, Ge. 18. 13-33; and afterwards his appearance to Moses, Ex. 3. 2; 19. 9, 16, 18, 21; 20. 18, 22; and recollect that in each case this was the same JEHOVAH variously manifested; and when these facts are compared, the various appearances in Job will be more easily understood as alike manifesting 'the Word that was with God, and was manifesting 'the word that was with God, and was God.' C.]

Ver. 2. [This ought rather to be rendered—'Who then darkeneth counsel,' &c. The words are addressed not to Elihu, who had just concluded speaking, but to Job, who said (ch. 31. 35), 'O that the Almighty would answer me!' And Job applies them to himself would answer he? And Job applies them to himself in ch. 42. 3. P.]

Ver. 7. [This is a suggestive as well as a beautiful passage. In the lofty imagery peculiar to the East there is embodied the truth that 'the sons of God,' or angelic hosts, existed before the formation of the world in its present state, and rejoiced at the construction of the splendid home of the future human family. It farther seems to indicate that the stars had been created previous to the preparation of this earth for man. P.

Ver. 10. [Bars and doors. How wonderful that the ron-bound rock and the loose disconnected sand should alike barrier out the encroachments of the ocean! The chief bars and doors, however, are the balancing of the relative attractions of the sun and moon, on the one hand, and of the earth on the other. Were the attractions of the sun and moon greater, and of the earth less, the earth would be swept over by a continuous ocean tide. C.]

Ver. 13. [The figure is taken from the shaking of a prepare him for deliverance! And how much more great floor-cloth or carpet. The morning light taking hold, as it were, of the whole covering of the earth's surface, shakes off from it all evil-doers. They flee from the light lest their deeds should be seen. P.]

Ver. 14. [The meaning seems to be, that it (the earth) when turned round to the full light of the sun, is like the clay on which the definite impress of the signet-ring is stamped. When all was dark the linea-ments upon its surface were invisible, but the light revealed them, and made them stand out in bold relief. P.)

Ver. 15. [Darkness is the light of the wicked. They love it, and work in it. The morning sun dispels the darkness, and the power ('the high arm') of the wicked is then broken. P.] Ver. 24. [East wind.

The east wind of Scripture ver. 24. [Last wina. The east wind of Scripture geography is uniformly that of destruction. See Ge. 41. 6; Job 27. 21; Ps. 48. 7; Je. 18. 17; Eze. 17. 10; 18. 12; Jn. 4. 8. C.]

Ver. 25. [The water-course refers not to river-beds, but to the aerial channel by which the rain descends, when produced by the lightning in the sky; as by passing the electric spark through oxygen and hydrogen gases water is formed. C.]

Ver. 31. [Orion. Kesil in Arabic signifies cold, inactivity, torpor, and seems justly applied by Aben Ezra to the star Antares in the heart of the constellation Scorpio; and it is opposed to Pleiades by nearly half the beavens, and would consequently denote the benumbing influences of winter. C.]

Ver. 32. [Mazzaroth. The twelve monthly signs of the zodiac.—Arcturus. Most probably the Great Bear, the apparent nightly changes of which always render it a most remarkable object to observers. C.]

Ver. 36. [The Hebrew word here rendered 'heart' has been variously interpreted. It is derived from a root which signifies to 'look at' or 'contemplate;' and hence it is natural to understand it as meaning the intellect. This is the meaning given to it by the best Jewish authorities. In the Vulgate version it is translated cock, as the bird which announces the coming of difficult is it to converse with God than is generally thought by those who appeal to him! Infinite is his wisdom who knows all things! and great his power who can do, and has made, and manages all things. All things around us are full of God: all monitors to teach us concerning him and to this content. teach us concerning him, and to stir us up to worship and glorify him! But the boasted knowledge of mankind is vain and scanty, which can everywhere be non-plussed in the most common things of nature. Let me then never contend with God;-never pretend to be a judge of his nature, purposes, or works:—but be always content with things as they are; and to be led by him, as one blind, in the ways which I know not. If he has made all things in nature so well, my new-cove-nant portion and lot is certainly exactly wise and kind. And if he take such care of the works of his hands, the most ravenous not excepted, it is impossible that he should forget, forsake, starve, or mismanage any of those who believe.

CHAPTER XXXIX. Ver. 1-4. Is it by thy CHAPTER XXXIX. Ver. 1-4. Is it by thy wisdom, power, care, and providence, that the wild goats and hinds are assisted in their painful births, or their young ones so well nourished? 5-8. Or that while the tame ass is so dull and stupid, the wild ass is so nimble, untractable, regardless of mankind, and lodged and maintained in the desert mountains? 9-12. Art thou capable, by all thy power and skill, to tame a wild bull, and train him to the labours of the field performed by the ox? 13-18. Dost thou adorn with wings and feathers the ostrich, that is so careless of her and young, that the sun must hatch the former, and Providence alone takes care of the latter, and so fleet in running with extended wings? 19-25. Hast fleet in running with extended wings? 19-25. Hast thou given strength and bravery to the horse? Dost thou produce the triumphant shaking of his mane, or the neighing and snorting of his throat, when he is bent upon the battle? Canst thou make him to bounce like a grasshopper? The disdainful and courageous snort-ings of his nostrils are terrible. When armies meet for battle he paweth in the valley, fiercely priding himself in his strength: he springs forth to meet the armour of war, rushing into the battle without any fear of Quite unaffrighted he laughs at the terror of the battle: he turns not back from the sword. Over | trates this passage:- 'Although docile as a lamb, and him regardless rattle and hiss the arrows of the quiver, the flaming spear, and ruinous lance. With fierceness and rage he gallops over and tears up the ground. For joy he reckons the sound of the trumpet but an encouraging blast: and at the full blowing of the trumpet he dances and sports for joy. He smells the battle afar off, the thunder like roaring of the princes, and the alarm of war. 26. Is it by thy direction that hawks fly away so strongly, steadily, swiftly, unveariedly, and cunningly, to catch their prey; and that they bask in the sun, or remove to warmer climates in the winter? 27-30. Is it by thy direction that eagles fly directly upward, or choose their rocky residence, or spy out and rush upon their prey?

Ver. 9. [The term 'unicorn,' or 'one-horned,' is a misnomer. The Hebrew word is reem, and it is evident from De. 33. 17, where 'the horns of an unicorn' are mentioned, that the animal referred to had two horns. P.1 Ver. 13. [Rather-'The wings of the ostrich vibrate, but are they as the pinions of the stork and the falcon? The wings of the ostrich never lift her from the earth, yet God compensates this defect by swiftness, so that she is as safe as the soaring falcon. God has deprived her of parental instincts, yet her young are protected by Providence as well as the young of the stork, the example and the emblem of maternal tenderness. C.

This is a very obscure passage. The true meaning of the verse seems to be, 'The wing of the ostrich (renanim, 'the female ostrich;' so called on account of her peculiar cry) vibrates joyously; but is wing and feather affectionate? i.e. as explained in the context, does she exhibit ordinary parental instinct or affection, when abandoning her eggs in the desert? P.]

Ver. 17. [It is a singular fact that among the Bedawin 'more foolish than an ostrich' is a common proverb; and it is evidently as old as the time of Job. 'Fleeter than an ostrich' is another proverb almost as common as the former. P.]

Ver. 24 [Rather—'And he standeth not still when the trumpet soundeth; i.e. so soon as his ear catches the sound of the war-trumpet he will scarcely bear restraint, he rushes to the battle. A remark of Layard, the truth of which I can myself verify, beautifully illusrequiring no other guide than the halter, when the Arab mare hears the war-cry of the tribe, and sees the quivering spear of her rider, her eyes glitter with fire, her blood-red nostrils open wide, her neck is nobly her blood-red nostrils open wide, her neck is nobly arched, and her tail and mane are raised and spread out to the wind. P.]

Ver. 29. [Her eyes behold afar off. The extraordinary far-sightedness of the eagle is well known. It can descry its prey on the ground when, to the human eye, it is perfectly invisible in the clouds; those species that live upon the dead fully realize our Lord's description, Mat. 24. 28, and an animal is scarcely fallen until they appear on the verge of the horizon basening to its deappear on the verge of the horizon hastening to its de-

REFLECTIONS.—Behold how all things mark the excellencies of their Maker and depend on God! The eyes of all wait on him; and he giveth them their meat in due season. And surely it is absurd for men to boast of beauty, strength, swiftness, or other bodily endowments, when one or more of the brute animals excel them in all these. But, alas! how often are we like them in their worst qualities, like hinds in sinful cowardice; like wild asses in our unsettled temper; like unicorns or wild bulls in untamableness and rage in the net of affliction; like ostriches in stupidity and unconcern about the real welfare of children; like horses in pride and fury; like hawks and eagles in ambition, greediness, and cruelty! But if God feed these, he will never let the redeemed sheep of his pasture want. Lo, in what lofty manner he speaks of these animals! But how much sweeter to my soul are his descriptions of Jesus and his love, Jesus and his work, Jesus and his fulness !- All for men! all for me!

CHAPTER XL. Ver. 2. Has there not been enough said to chastise and convince thee of thy mistakes in contending with and censuring the providence of God? 3. Job replied to the Lord, 4. Behold, with grief and shame, I acknowledge my own meanness, folly, and filthiness. I have nothing to say against thee or for myself. 5. I have too often desired a dispute with thee; but I dare not defend my conduct. I dare not proceed further in such bold and presumptions of the providers. 4. OURCE OF THE JORDAN. [Job, x1:23.]—"Behold, he drinketh up a river, and hasteneth not: he trusteth that he can draw up Jordan into his mouth." Perhaps the two leading sources of the river are found in the Hasbany arm and the Banias tributary. The view we give above was taken at Banias or ancient Cæsarea Philippi. Nothing can be imagined more beautiful than the very vigorous way the Tordan breaks from under the Hermon range of mountains, creating in ancient Cæsarea Philippi a tropical vegetation. This is a very beautiful historic spot. Here is the temple with its Greek inscriptions dedicating the place to Pan and the nymphs of the fountain. Then here is abundance of game. Wild boars, foxes, jackals, gazelles, deer, hare, wolves, hyenas, bears and panthers are said to infest this region.

29 From thence she seeketh the prey, and her eyes behold afar off.

30 Her young ones also suck up blood: and where the slain ore, there is she.

MOREOVER the Lord answered Job, and said,

- 2 Shall he that "contendeth" with the Almighty instruct him? he that breproveth God, let him answer it.
 - 3 Then Job answered the LORD, and said,
- 4 Behold, I am vile; what shall I answer thee? I will day mine hand upon my mouth.
- 5 Once have I spoken, but I will not answer;
- yea, twice, but I will 'proceed no further.'

 6 Then answered the Lord unto Job out of the whirlwind, and said,
- 7 Gird up thy loins now like a man: I will demand of thee, and declare thou unto me.
- 8 Wilth thou also disannul my judgment? wilt thou condemn me, that thou mayest be righteous?

his repentance not being sufficiently full, God further required him to pluck up his spirits if he could, and answer some further interrogations. 8. Wilt thou, in the manner of wicked men, arraign and attempt to overturn my sentence against thee, and my government of human affairs? Wilt thou censure me as unjust in afflicting thee that thou mayest appear innocent? 9, 10. Art thou God's equal in infinite power, majesty, or glory? II-I4. Canst thou, as God, scatter abroad the tokens of thine anger; or exhibit thy frowns for the debasement and destruction of thy most powerful and insolent enemies? If so, I will acknowledge thou canst uphold thyself, and hast some pretence to contend with me; but if not, it becomes thee humbly to submit to my most afflictive providences. that thou mayest be further convinced of thy inability to contend with me, behold how incapable thou art of contending with the elephant or river-horse, which I formed along with thee as thy fellow-creature, and not far from along with thee as thy reliow-creature, and not far from thy residence? He quietly feeds upon the herbs pro-duced by the earth. Behold what strength is in his loins; what mighty force is in the warped sinews of his belly! His tail is large, stiff, and strong as a cedar; and with it, or his trunk, he could rend cedars. The sinews of his thighs are interwoven and wrapped together; his smaller bones are as pipes of brass, and the larger ones as bars of iron for strength. He is a principal creature on earth. The mighty God, who made him and gives him his power, can easily subdue and tempt to rival his honours.

The mountains afford him pasture, while the other wild beasts securely sport themselves around His ordinary residence is under the shadow of trees or reeds, growing in fens or on the banks of rivers. No outrageous overflowing of waters affrights him, or makes him to run off in haste. And while he dives into a river, or drinks excessively, no terror can make him leave off till his thirst be altogether quenched.

REFLECTIONS.—To what arrogant quarrelling with God afflicted saints sometimes proceed! but it always issues in great shame and grief at last. Who then is able to contend with me, who am infinitely more strong and terrible? ance. And it is unsate to near wounded consciences with me, who am infinitely more strong and terribuer slightly, or to catch at comforts to be rid of convictions. CHAPTER XLII.

1 Job submitteth himself unto God. 7 God. preferring Job's cause, maketh his three friends submit themselves to him. 9 He accepteth and blesseth Job. 16 His age and death.

THEN Job answered the LORD, and said, 2 I know that athou canst do every thing. and that bno thought can be withholden from 3 Who is he that hideth counsel without knowledge?2 therefore have I uttered that I will demand³ of thee, and declare thou unto me. 5 I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear; but now mine eye seeth thee:4 6 Wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes.

7 ¶ And it was so, that, after the LORD had spoken these words unto Job, the LORD said to ^jEliphaz the Temanite, My wrath is kindled against thee, and against thy two friends: for ye have not kspoken of me the thing that is right, as my servant Job hath.5

8 Therefore take unto you now seven bullocks and seven rams, and mgo to my servant Job, and offer up for yourselves a burnt-offering; and my servant Job shall "pray for you: for 'him will I accept: lest I deal with you pafter your folly, in that ye have not spoken of me the thing which is right, like my servant Job.

9 \ So Eliphaz the Temanite, and Bildad the Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite went, to take a particular view of the strength and well-pro-portioned parts of the monster which I have mentioned; 13. Who dare strip him of his scaly skin, or put a bridle in his mouth? 14. Who dare open his jaws? The surrounding rows of his teeth are terror itself. 15-17. They, as well as his scales, are closely and inseparably conas well as his scales, are closely and inseparatily con-nected. 18. His neesings, while he lies gaping in the sun, make a light to shine, and the water which he spouts up into the air reflects the sunbeams. His sparkling eyes emit a reddish and bright shining light. 19-21. How ternit a reddish and bright shining light. 19-21. How terribly hot is the stream of breath which proceeds from his mouth or nostrils? 22. In his neck strength lodges to an amazing degree. Before his face sorrow and to an amazing degree. Before his tace sorrow and desolation triumphantly leap, as, without fear or pity, he destroys every animal he meets with. 23. The flakes of his flesh are, as it were, soldered into a lump of metal, which cannot be moved or easily cut asunder. 24. His heart consists of the most solid flesh; and is quite destitute of every form of compassion. 25. When he appears above water the courageous mariners are rendered almost distracted with terror, and forced to their confessions and prayers, expecting nothing but present death. 26-29. No sword, spear, dart, javelin, arrows, or slinged stones can be made to penetrate his body. 30. Without hurt or pain he makes his bed on sharp-pointed rocks, stones, or pieces of ice. 31. When he breathes and tumbles about in the water, he makes it to foam and rage as if it were a boiling pot full of ointment. 32. When he swims along, he leaves the furrows behind him all marked with froth and foam, on the surface of the sea. 33. No animal on earth is equally fearless and terrible. 34. With contempt he on the surface of the sea. 33. It o animal on earth is equally fearless and terrible. 34. With contempt he beholds the highest animals or loftiest ships, and brings them down with a sweep of his tail, tearing and rending them at his pleasure. He is king of all the huge and fierce-looking monsters.

Ver. I. [Leviathan. From the description of ver. 33, we believe leviathan to be some of those extinct species of animals whose gigantic remains prove the existence of creatures 60 feet and upwards in length and 25 in height; but of wnose instinctive endow-ments and habits we can know nothing, unless they be contained in the wonderful description of this chapter. C.—The minute description given of leviathan in this sublime passage will leave no doubt on the mind animals, how scanty must be my knowledge of their infinite Maker! If these are a terror to me, how much more ought the Almighty and his infinite majesty! If I could not tame or manage some one of these, how dare I presume to attempt wresting the government of providence out of God's hand! Surely then, above all, I must not dare to imagine him my debtor, or to interrogate him concerning his conduct. And if my And if my God governs these monsters, I need not be afraid of either men or devils. But why should I indulge pride, when, after all my boastings, I am to have some ugly and ravenous monster my superior in it?

REFLECTIONS.—If I am so unacquainted with

CHAPTER XLII. [Ver. 3. Job here refers to his own previous conduct. He had attempted by his rash statements, and his insinuations of injustice on God's part, and injured innocence on his own part, to of the naturalist that the crocodile is the animal here obscure the gracious purpose the Almighty had in view

10 And the Lord turned the captivity of Job, when he prayed for his friends: also the LORD gave Job twice as much as he had before.

11 Then acame there unto him all his brethren, and all his sisters, and all they that had been of his acquaintance before, and did eat bread with him in his house; and they bemoaned him, and comforted him over all the evil that the LORD had brought upon him: every man also gave him a piece of money, and every one an ear-ring of gold.7

REFLECTIONS.—How serious and humble fellowship with God makes a soul! And it is a great mercy that, when he demands of us answers of obedience, we may freely demand of him knowledge and grace to answer his requirements. If his gracious convictions render us exceeding vile and loathsome in our own view, let us expect that our deliverance is at hand, sesus' blood and grace can more than balance our sins. Whom God humbles and pardons he delights to honour and acknowledge as his own. Yea, tenderly he regards his afflicted saints, notwithstanding their peevish quarbellings with him. He resents in the most humiliating manner the injuries done to them by their angry friends: and he often finds them sadly mistaken who were positive of their being in the right. But it is pleasant to see saints reconciled to one another through Jesus' death, in order to their enjoyment of comfortable fellowship with God. And our consolation is certainly approaching when our repentance towards God, faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ, and forgiving kindness to and prayer for injurious friends, are become re-markable. God can easily make all things concur for the welfare or enrichment of his people. And it is absurd therefore to despair in distress, when this very book was written for our encouragement in it.was not Job a type of our blessed Redeemer? He was infinitely rich and righteous; yet for our sakes he became poor, till he had not where to lay his head. Quickly was he reduced to the depths of abasement: and behold how he lay bearing our sins, and carrying our sorrows, in the stable—in the manger—in the garden—on the cross—and in the grave! Stupendous and amazing were the troubles, the assaults, he suffered from God-from sinners-from saints! How tempted -how reproached—how afflicted and tormented! But marvellous was his faith, resignation, and patience; and undeserved and powerful his intercession; till at last he arose into illustrious and lasting glory and honour; and a great church of Jewish and Gentile saints succeeded and proceeded from his troubles.

THE BOOK OF PSALMS.

The Book of Psalms is one of the most extensive and useful in Holy Scripture, as it is everywhere suited to the case of the saints. It is at first much mixed with complaints and supplications, and at last issues in pure and lasting praise. That Heman composed Ps. lxxxviii., Ethan the lxxxixth, and Moses the xcth is certain. But whether those under the name of Asaph were mostly penned by him, or only assigned to be sung by him as a master of the temple music, as others were to Jeduthun, or to the sons of Korah, or other chief musicians, we cannot determine. Some, as Ps. lxxiv. lxxix. cxxvi. cxxxvii., appear to have been composed after the captivity to Babylon was begun; but by whom we know not. The rest, including those two marked with the name of Solomon, might be composed by David, the sweet Psalmist of Israel.

Twenty-five of the psalms have no title at all; and whether the titles of the rest are of divine authority is not altogether agreed. But when it is considered that these titles everywhere appear in the Hebrew originals, and how often they serve as a key to the psalm, and are sometimes connected with it by the accentuating points, there is no real ground to suspect their authenticity. Nor are interpreters agreed with respect to the signification of some of the Hebrew words standing in these titles. We think that Maschil always signifies that the psalm is designed for instruction, Ps. xxxii. xlii. xliii. xlv. liii. liv. lv. lxxiv. lxxviii. LXXXVIII. IXXXIX. MICHTAM denotes the precious or golden nature of the psalm; as Ps. xvi. lvi.-lx. Altaschith, that the scope of the psalm is to deprecate destrucsion, Ps. lvii. lviii. lix. MUTHLABBEN, that the psalm was composed on the occasion of the death of his son, or of Goliath the duellist, Ps. ix. AIJELETH SHAHAR, that its subject is Jesus Christ, the hind of the morning, Ps. xxii. JONATH-ELEM-REHOKIM, that David is therein represented as a mute dove among foreigners, Ps. 1vi. SHOSHANNIM, SHOSHANNIM-EDUTH, or SHUSHAN-EPUTH, may either signify that Christ and his people, who are lilies, or lilies of the congregation or testimony, are the subject of it; or that it was sung on an instrument of six strings, Ps. xlv. lx. lxix. lxxx., as Sheminith denotes an instrument of eight strings, Ps. vi. xii. MAHALATH may either signify the disease, and MAHALATH-LEANOTH the afflicting disease; or MAHALOTH may signify a wind-instrument of music, Ps. liii. lxxxviii. NEGINATH and NEGINOTH denote stringed instruments of music, Ps. lxi. iv. vi. liv. lv. lxvii. lxxvi. Nehiloth, wind ones, Ps. v. Gittith, a musical instrument, or tune invented at Gath, Ps. viii. lxxxi. lxxxiv. Alamore, the virginals, or a song to be sung by the virgins, Ps. xlvi. Shiggaion, or Shigionore, may denote the diversified matter or tune of the psalm, Ps. vii. The cxxth and fourteen next following are called Songs of Degrees; perhaps because they were sung on the different steps of the temple-stairs; or were sung at certain halts made by David and the Israelites when they brought up the ark of God from Kirjathjearim to Jerusalem, 2 Sa. vi.; or were sung by the Hebrews at their different rests when they came up from the country to their three solemn feasts; or were partly sung by the Jews at their different resting-places in their return from Babylon, Le. xxiii.; Ezr. ii.

The Hebrews divided this book into FIVE, ending with Ps. xli. lxxii. lxxxix. cvi. and cl.; the first four of which are concluded with AMEN. Interpreters have attempted to arrange or class the Psalms into a variety of different forms. To me it appears not improper to distinguish them into, I. Instructive; which are either (1) HESTORICAL, relating what God had done for the psalmist or for the Jewish nation, &c., as Ps. xviii. lxxiii. civ. cv. cvi. cxiv. cxxxvi. (most of which are also Eucharistic); or (2) Doctrinal, declaring and explaining the principles and duties of religion; as Pa. i. xiv. xv. xix. xxxvii. xxxvii. xlix. l. liii. lxiv. lxxvi. lxxvii. lxxxii. lxxxii. xc. ci. cxii. cxix. cxxxii. cxxxii. cxxxii. cxxxii. Prophetic; foretelling events relative to Christ or his church; as Ps. ii. viii. zvi. xxi. xxii. xxiv. xxix. xl. xlv. xlvii. lxvii. lxvii. lxxii. lxxxii. lxxxii. lxxxii. xcvii. xcvii. xcvii. c. cx. cxvii. cxxxii. cxlix.; not a few of which are also Eucharistic. III. Consolatory; in which the psalmist comforts himself and others in the promises, perfections, or works of God; as Ps. iv. xi. xxiii. xxvii.

THE BOOK OF PSALMS.

XXXII. XXXVII. 21v11. 1v1ii. 1xxiii. xci. cxxi. cxxv. cxxviii. cxxix. IV. Petitionaex; in which he bewails his own or the church's condition, and supplicates deliver-lxxix. Ixxx. lxxxiii. lxxxv. lxxxvi. lxxxviii. cii. cxix. cxx. cxxxiii. cxxx. cxxxiii. cxxxviii. cxl. cxlii. cxlii. xviii. Seven of these, in which the psalmist makes confession of his sin, viz. Ps. vi. xxii. xxxviii. li. cii. cxxx. cxliii., are called Penitential. V. Eucharistic; in which he stirs up himself and others to praise and thank the Lord for his favours; as Ps. ix. xviii. xxx. xxxiii. xxxiv. lx. lxv.-lxviii. xcv.-c. ciii.-cviii. cxi. cxiii. cxv.-cxviii. cxxii. cxxiv. cxxvi. cxxxiv.-cxxxvi. exxxviii. cxliv.-cxlviii. cxlix. cl. But indeed historical narratives, doctrinal instructions, prophecies, consolations, supplications, praises, and thanksgivings, are often so pleasantly and profitably connected in the same psalm that it is difficult to assign it to one class rather than to another. And what is HISTORICAL, as it relates to David and the Jewish church, is often Typical and so Propheric, as it relates to Jesus Christ and the gospel church or heavenly state. Many, too, of the SUPPLICATIONS respecting deliverances from or the destruction of enemies, are to be considered as real PREDICTIONS of the events, they being dictated by the inspiration of Him who can declare the end from the beginning.

To this conclusion the Editor was conducted by a process nearly as follows:-

- 1. From the confident reference to the Psalms made by our Lord himself.
- 2. From the equally confident reference of the apostles to the same authority; as, for example, amongst many others, Ac. 13. 33, where a psalm not unfrequently represented as descriptive of the instalment of David on his throne in Israel, is distinctly affirmed by the Holy Spirit to be descriptive of the sitting down of the glorified Saviour upon his throne in heaven.
- 3. By the evident insufficiency of every other principle of interpretation. Throughout the entire series of Psalms, he found so frequently and so constantly the character of some one so righteous, that to apply it to David would outrage all his history; and which, to apply to any mere man, would gainsay all observation and experience. But this righteous character, in all its various forms of exhibition, he found most exactly to correspond to the evangelical history of Christ: the conclusion was therefore inevitable—this character was that of Christ. It was in contemplating the first psalm that this conclusion first forced itself upon his mind. He had often heard that psalm, by what is called the principle of 'accommodation,' expounded as descriptive of the 'happiness of the godly,' contrasted with 'the misery of the ungodly;' and in this interpretation all ordinary authority induced him to acquiesce. Yet still did he feel himself unable to account for the factthat the description so far exceeded the reality. 'Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor mitteth in the seat of the scornful: but his delight is in the law of the LORD; and in his law doth he meditate day and night. And he shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season: his leaf also shall not wither: and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper.' In real life he had never seen such a man; he had never read of such a one amongst the most eminent Scripture saints. Why then did the Spirit of God, in full command of all the words of truth, proceed to draw a moral picture so far surpassing the alleged original? This was a question to which no satisfactory answer was ever presented to his Yet this was the very question that never ceased to recur demanding a solution. True he had found some excellent commentators, amongst whom may be recorded the honoured names of Gill, Romaine, and Horne, who had taught that the opening of this psalm was descriptive of Christ; but whereas for this opinion they assigned no obvious principle of interpretation, he found in it no positive satisfaction, because it appeared as much depending upon the principle of accommodation as that from which he was anxious to retreat. It was while thus puzzled between these two forms of authority, in neither of which he could discover any principle of interpretation, that his mind was earnestly turned to inquire whether any such principle actually existed. In human science he readily and clearly perceived its existence. He saw that if a book contained the names and descriptions of a thousand plants, the accomplished botanist might have some search, but no difficulty, in discovering, amidst the thousand, any plant whatsoever, and declaring its name, provided merely that the description were truly and fully drawn. To the inexperienced eye, many of the plants might appear not merely similar but the same; but the distinctive characteristics would, to the eye of the botanist, be as obvious as the sun at noonday. And were there, in the Scriptures, any such simple principle of interpretation as this, how easily might it be applied in directing our inquiries and settling our conclusions. And was there not such a principle, and was not this the very principle—the mere, but exact correspondence of the recorded description with the object described, and its obvious want of such exact correspondence with any other object? Of the existence and application of this principle the Editor soon found numerous examples in the New Testament; for instance, Ac. 2. 29-36. Now in many copies of the Scriptures lying before him he found this psalm distinctly interpreted as primarily descriptive of David, and only in some secondary or derivative and typical sense applicable to Christ. It is remarkable, however, that the apostle makes no such distinction, but directly affirms that it is a prophecy concerning our Lord. Now from what principle of interpretation does he draw this conclusion? From the simple and obvious principle that it is not true concerning David, 'for David (when he speaks) is not ascended into the heavens; but is literally true concerning Christ, whom God hath 'raised up,' of which fact the apostles 'all are witnesses.' This principle per ceived-and perceived it irresistibly commends itself to adoption-the meaning of the first pealm became most obvious. It did not describe any of the mere children of men from Adam, their head, downward. But the moment Christ is discovered, it is found exactly to correspond to the evangelical history of 'the days of his flesh.' It is, therefore, not a prophecy but a description of Christ—a moral, a spiritual picture of his character drawn by the Holy Ghost, by whom the holy men of old being moved did speak; and by which, before he appeared, the church knew what to expect; and by which, when he did appear, she should have instantly recognized her Lord.

The following are accordingly the principal rules of interpretation by which the Editor has been guided, and to which, however unimportant they may appear, he ventures to solicit the earnest attention of the disciples of the Bible.

- 1. The Old Testament is interpreted by the Spirit speaking in the New Testament; even as the 'perfect day' more clearly exhibits, but does not change, what is dimly seen at the dawn.
- 2. When one part of a psalm is thus, by the Holy Ghost, applied to Christ, every other part of the psalm must be applied to him in a way consistent with the analogy of faith in the other Scriptures.
 - 3. When one psalm is found, by quotation in the New Testament, to apply to Christ, every parallel psalm must likewise apply to him.
- 4. When a description in the whole or part of a psalm is found absolutely inapplicable to any of the patriarchs, prophets, apostles, or other saints, but, at the same time, perfectly applicable to Christ, then, according to the principle above developed, that psalm is not to be interpreted of such patriarch, prophet, apostle, or saint, but of Christ in his person, qualifications, trials, warfare, victories, or kingdom.
- 5. A large amount of interpretation must, as in the other Scriptures, be referred to the grammatical construction, especially in the bearing of the words 'I, thou, he, and their plurals, taken in conjunction with the attributes or acts ascribed to them respectively. C.]

[The Book of Psalms is a connecting link between the Old Testament and the New. In them the great purposes and lessons of the Mosaic law are set forth. In them is expressed the very essence of the symbolical institutions and manifold transactions of Providence, through which the members of the old covenant were instructed in the knowledge and trained to the service of the true God. In them the Jew was taught that the form without the spirit was vain-that a spiritual God required spiritual worship. In them the mind of the worshipper was concentrated upon the Messiah—the Shepherd, the Saviour, the King of his people. While the Psalms were thus wondrously adapted for the expression of praise under the old economy, they were no less adapted, from the fulness and clearness of their typical bearings, to give expression to the devout praise, and to give right direction to the spiritual thoughts, of the Christian. There is not a feature in the divine character now developed in the gospel-there is not an aspiration in the heart of the enlightened disciple of Jesus-there is not a matter of vital experience in the divine life-of which the record is not to be found in the Psalms of David. To say that they are wholly Jewish in their cast and character, is totally to mistake their object and to misapprehend their meaning. The poetry, even the Christian poetry of the world, is as far behind the inspired Psalms in lofty Christian sentiment, and in depth and fulness of Christian doctrine, as it is in sublimity of thought and beauty of expression. I would refer in proof to Ps. xxiii. xlvi. li. lxvii. c. ciii.

exiv. The old and the new meet and blend gloriously in the Psalms;—the old, with its gorgeous but instructive ritual, and its sublime but suggestive imagery; and the new, with its simple but glorious and cheering truths. Thus the Book of Psalms, standing midway between both covenants, and serving equally to the members of each as the handmaid of a living piety, is a witness of the essential identity of their primary and fundamental ideas. The Psaims can never be superseded in the service of the sanctuary. Alike in seasons of deepest sorrow and holiest rapture, the Christian will instinctively turn to them. P.]

PSALM I. Wer. 1. Blessed is the man. Rather, 'O the blessedness of that man, that man of a thousand, who walketh not in the counsel of the unjust, who withhold God's due of love and obedience; who standeth not in the way of transgressors, to meet them, or converse with them on their own terms; who sittetle not in the seat of the mocker of God's authority and institutions. Has any son of Adam ever realized these three negatives in character but Christ? Is not this then the Christ described by character? C. Ver. 4. The imagery of the psalm is thoroughly oriental. The 'tree p'anted by the rivers of water' would not be exposed to the withering influence of a parched soil and scorching sun during the long rainless and cloudless summers. The chaff of the threshing-floor, driven away by the wind from the midst of the rich grain—what a picture of the wicked! P.

Ver. 6. Christ the truth is the away of the righteous to glory, Jn. 14.6. Satan and lies are the way of the wicked to destruction. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How dangerous is the company of wicked men, and how headlong the progress of sin! They who walk in the counsel of sinners will quickly wait for opportunities of sinning, and will with pleasure accompany with scorners. But precious and useful are the oracles of God, as means to preserve us from temptation, and to animate us to every good word and work. And it is the heavenly-minded and thoughtful Christian that will be the thriving one. It is absurd for saints to study conformity to this world, when God has marked such a difference, such an opposition, between them and the men of it. And when their end answers so exactly to their life and to the glory of the divine perfections. May God's company, God's word, God's influences, God's approbation, and God's final judgment, and the eternity consequent thereon, be ever dear to my heart!

PSALM II. Ver. x. Why do the heathen rage? The heathen nations being madly attached to idolatry and the Jewish people to self-righteousness, united in opposition to Christ, Ac. 4. 26; and for the same reasons all who inherit their principles still persevere in the same opposition. C.

Ver. 2. The kings of the earth set themselves, &c. 'Array or marshal' their hosts—their military power and cruel legal enactments and agents, as in the Jewish and Roman persecutions of the early Christians, or the terrible machinery of the Inquisition in the later days of the Reformation. C.

Ver. 3. The main purpose or object of this psalm is to celebrate the dignity, power, and ultimate triumph of the Anointed One. The ode is divided into four parts of three stanzas each. In the first, the presumptuous rebellion of the princes of the earth is mentioned, ver. 1—3. In the second, the Lord Jehovah expresses his contempt for the rebels, and announces his purpose to overthrow them by the agency of his Anointed One, ver. 4—6. In the third, the Anointed One declares his office, and his resolve to carry out Jehovah's will, and execute vengeance, ver. 7—9. In the fourth, a practical and solemn warning and admonition is given to the whole princes and people of the earth. P.

Ver. 4. LORD. ADONAI, not JEHOVAH, as in ver. 2, 7, 11. Adonai signifies my pillars, God in the character of providential upholder. C.

Ver. 7. My Son. A title of the 'Word that was God' (In, 1, 1).

Vet. 4: Lord. Abord., not Jemoval, as in Ver. 2, 7, Adonai signifies my pillurs, God in the character of providential upholder. C. Ver. 7. My Son. A title of the 'Word that was God' (Jn. 1. 1), that 'eternal life that was with the Father' (1 Jn. 1. 1), and who thus being 'eternal life with the Father', must have been his eternal Son: for as Father necessarily implies a Son, if the Father were eternal, a point that cannot be disputed, so must the Son have been eternal. C.

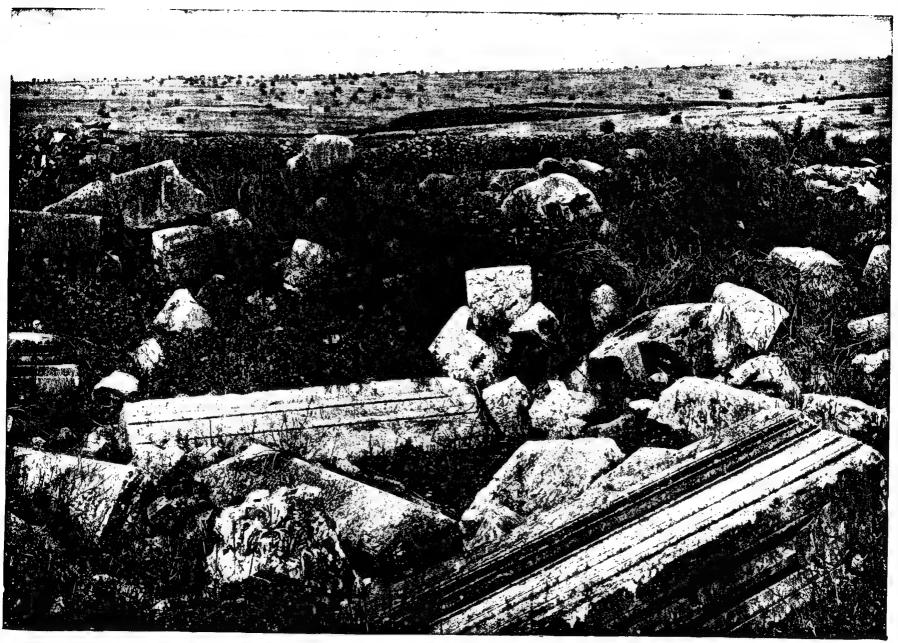

Ver. 12. The Son is the Anointed of ver. 2; the King of ver. 6; and the omnipotent Conqueror of ver. 9. The Hebrew word translated 'Son' is different from that used in ver. 7. It is an older, and appears to have been a more dignified, term. It will be observed that the three last verses of the psalm correspond to the three first. The revolt against the Lord and his Anointed finds its parallel in the injunction to serve the Lord and to kiss the Son. P.

REFLECTIONS.—Bitter and inveterate is the en-

REFLECTIONS. - Bitter and inveterate is the enmity of mankind against Jesus Christ our Saviour. 988

The agents of hell, Jews and Gentiles, readily drop their private animosities to harmonize in opposition to him! If his cause is to be run down they cordially unite in the work! And not well-grounded fear, but enraged enmity, makes the princes of the earth to oppose his kingdom, which is not of this world. But in vain are all their contrivances and fury. His church, and every believer, is fixed on a rock, against which the powers of hell and earth can never prevail. Jesus' person, as the only begotten Son of God from eternity, and declared to be such in his resurrection from the dead, and the new covenant made with him, are their everlasting foundation. His intercession, and the saving power of his Spirit, endear them to himself. But dreadful is the judgment executed on his Jewish, heathen, antichristian, or other opposers! And if the great are not good they shall receive the deeper dam-nation. O how mixed is the service of Christ on earth! Whilst we rejoice in him and his fulness, we need to tremble on account of our own guilt and corruption, and the snares and dangers that attend us. But holy jealousy and filial fear produce joys unspeakable and full of glory. While the world contemn him and riot in wantonness, let my soul kiss, receive, love, adore, and submit to God's Son; so shall I be blessed in him with all spiritual blessings in time and eternity.

PSALM III. Ver. 2. Selak. Though this word occurs upwards of seventy times in the Psalms, its meaning is much disputed. By some it has been reckoned a musical pause, by others a mark of attention; by others a repetition; by others as equivalent to Amen! while some consider it indicative of the eternal value of the proceeding passage. C.

WINS OF THE SYNAGOGUE AT CAPERNAUM—WHERE CHRIST HEALED THE MAN WITH THE WITHERED HAND. [PSALMS, ii:7.]—"I will declare the decree: the Lord hath said unto me, Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee." We give this view of the ruins of the synagogue at Capernaum because it was at Capernaum that our Saviour wrought the majority of his miracles and delivered many of his discourses. The ruins at Capernaum indicate that this was once a place of importance, but now it is in a state of perfect decay and desolation. The ruins extend for half a mile along the coast and as far back into the interior. Here are fragments of ancient walls and foundations. The rank growth of bushes and weeds almost prevent travelers from making careful measurements. There are architectural fragments in the above synagogue which belong to a very ancient period. There are pieces of Corinthian capitals, architraves, elaborate friezes and pedestals.

Ver. 7. This was never true of David the son of Jesse, hence it must be interpreted of the final victory of David's Lord. The parallelism of this with the second Psalm clearly refers it Christ. C.—Allusion is probably made to wild beasts, to which David compares his enemies. God disarms them as one would disarm a lion or tiger, by breaking its jaw, or dashing out its teeth. P.

REFLECTIONS.-Whilst I here behold Jesus con-REFLECTIONS.—Whilst I here behold Jesus con-flicting, crying, and conquering, and entering into his glory, let me think how often the greatest trials spring from whence we least expected them! from our own house, our near relations! How numerous the seed of the serpent; and how furious their opposition to Christ and his people! But if troubles drive us to our God and our duty, we shall be effectually protected and honourably exalted. Our cries of faith shall be speedily answered from his temple, his heaven, his Christ. Confederacies of foes unnumbered, and savage as will be shall but enhance and exwerter our salvation. beasts, shall but enhance and sweeten our salvation and blessings, and shall bring upon themselves fearful and lasting ruin.

PSALM IV. Ver. 6. Who will show us. The word us here discovers the believing church offering the only 'sacrifices of righteousness,' a confident reliance upon the finished work and gracious countenance of her Lord, 2 Co. 4.6; He. 9. 23; x Pe. 2.5. C.

REFLECTIONS. - In every distress God is a safe refuge to flee to: and the more of his kindness we have refuge to fiee to: and the more of his kindness we have experienced, the more bold ought to be our prayers and the stronger our faith. But base is the work, contemptible the character, and vile the desires of the wicked, when compared with those of the godly. What fear of God and his judgments, what serious self-examination, what cordial dedication to God through Christ, are necessary in them that are saved! The wishes of the unregenerate are senseless and sensual: but exalted are the desires, readily granted the felicity, and unmoved the rest of them who firmly believe.

PSALM V. Ver. x. Who speaks these words, David or some other? whosoever he be, it appears from ver. 12 that his confidence lies in his being rightense. Now there is none righteous but Christ (comp. Ro. 3. 70; x]m. 2. x], the conclusion is therefore inevitable: this is a prayer of Christ, the Holy Spirit speaking by the prophet, foreshowing to the church how he would pray, as the same Spirit speaking in the evangelists has recorded for the church how he did pray. See especially In. xvii. C. Ver. 7. The Hebrew word here trans'ated 'temple' was applied to the church how he did pray. See especially In. xvii. Thus it is said Eli sat 'by a post of the temple of the Lord' at Shiloh, x Sa. 1.9. Consequently the use of this word cannot be adduced as a proof that David was not the author of the psalm. P. Ver. 20. Such petitions against enemies frequently occurring in the psalm have afforded occasion for infidels to object, and even for believers to plead a difference between the spirit of the Jewish and Christian dispensations. With those who sit in the 'seat of the scorner' we may not here plead, but with believers we must. 1. To them we say, By whom spake the prophets of old? by the Holy Ghost (a Pe. 1. 22), never by their own spirit. 2. Does not God punish rebellious sinners according to this word? Certainly. Then does God ever do what the holiest may not entreat him to do? 3. Do not men, the very objectors, appeal to courts of law for redress of injuries? And may not Christ then appeal to his Father for the destruction of the works of the devil'? 1 Jn. 3, 8, C.

REFLECTIONS.-Meditation is the director, fervour the life, faith the presenter, and a reconciled God in Christ, as our own, the object, the morning a principal season, and atient expectation the attendant of every true prayer. And while the holiness, justice, and mercy of God in Christ demand our sincerity, and encourage our boldness in approaching to his throne of grace, the wickedness and danger of sinners, the number and mischievous intentions of our enemies, difficulty of our duty, and our need of immediate blessings, should keep us firmly in the exercise. Never should our brethren of mankind, and especially our fellow-saints, lack our warm remembrance in it: and from the prayer of faith we may confidently expect the answer of peace. But, alas! miserable are the sinners, the rebels, against God and his Christ! How universal their corruption of heart—of tongue—of practice! How fearful the ruin that awaits them! But their contriv-ances to dishonour Jesus Christ, and afflict his people, or to deliver themselves, shall be made the means of their aggravated woe.

PSALM VI. Ver. 1. Rebuke me. There is here but one speaker, and that he is Christ will appear from the quotation of ver. 8 in Mat. 7. 23. Let the candid and pious student of Scripture also consult He. 5. 7. C.

Ver. 5. These words are literal facts; God is not remembered by the dead—the dead bodies that lie in the grave, which very death and grave Christ came to conquer and destroy, He. 13. 14; I Co. 15. 57. C.

Ver. 7. There is great graphic power, and at the same time deep pathos, in this verse. The eye wasted away—its fire, and brightness, and beauty extinguished by continuous weeping. Dimness as of age creeping over it. All this arising from the uncessing persecutions of his enemies. P.

REFLECTIONS.—Not even kings are exempted from the common miseries of life! But it is hard to sup-port under sore sickness and a wounded spirit at once: port under sore sickness and a wounded spirit at once: and yet God's dearest saints have often the largest shares of them. There is no relief under such a burden but to cast it on God. And when our sins have been great so must be our sorrow. The removal of the sense of God's displeasure must be more earnestly desired, than abatement of or relief from our sufferings. And if God ever regard us, it is neither for our righteousness, nor for our sorrows or sufferings, but for his mercy in Christ. However desirable it is to be with Christ in heaven, saints are to wish for life, while it is for the in neaven, saints are to wish for life, while it is for the glory of God and the good of his church. But quickly they who sow in tears shall reap in joy. And if God answer one prayer, he will answer all that follow in faith. He is the same Hearer of prayer yesterday, to-day, and for ever. But close fellowship with God really draws the saints from delight in or intimacy with the wided and guide and in the property of the saints from delight in or intimacy with the wided and guide and in the property of the saints from delight in or intimacy. with the wicked: and quick and inevitable ruin awaits their impenitent injurers.

7 So kshall the congregation of the people compass thee about: for their sakes therefore return thou on high.6

8 The Lord shall judge the people: "judge me, O Lord, according to my righteousness, and according to mine integrity that is in me.7

9 Oho let the wickedness of the wicked come to an end; but restablish the just: afor the righteous God trieth the hearts and reins.

upright in heart.

11 God *judgeth the righteous, and God is angry with the wicked every day.

12 If he turn not, he will whet his sword; he hath bent his bow, and made it ready.

13 He hath also prepared for him the instruments of death; he "ordaineth his arrows against the persecutors.

14 Behold, he travaileth with iniquity, and hath conceived mischief, and brought forth falsehood.

15 He made a pit,1 and digged it, and is fallen into the ditch which he made.

16 His mischief shall return upon his own head, and his violent dealing shall come down upon his own pate.

17 Ia will praise the Lord according to his righteousness; and will sing praise to the name of the Lord most high.

PSALM VIII.

God's glory is magnified by his works, and by his love to man. To the chief musician upon "Gittith, A psalm of David.

LORD our Lord, blow excellent is thy name in all the earth! who hast set thy glory above the heavens.

PSALM VII. Title. It ought not to be forgotten that the superscriptions or titles prefixed to many of the Psalms are not inspired. They are generally of late date, and of questionable suthenticity. Nothing is known of Cush the Benjamite. He is not mentioned elsewhere; but he may possibly have been one of the followers of Saul when he was in pursuit of David amid the wilds and strongholds of the desert. P.

Ver. 1. The denial of all iniquity, ver. 3, and the appeal to judgment on the ground of righteousness and integrity (ver. B-11), could never have proceeded from David the son of Jesse. He confessed his sin, and the Holy Spirit hath recorded that sin for our warning, and his repentance and pardon for our encouragement. But the denial of iniquity, and the appeal to judgment an the ground of righteousness, are most becoming in David's Lord (Mat. 22. 43), who knew no sin. These verses, therefore, being absolutely untrue of David, but perfectly true of Christ, we have the utmost evidence that this psalm is a prayer of Christ. C.

Ver. 13. This and the following verses point to an individual. But who is he? Read Ac. 1. 16, 20; Ps. 69. 25, and then say, is not this also a description of the arch-traitor, the prototype of all the subsequent persecutors of Christ and his church—in principle, covetousness; in practice, cruelty; and in the end, self-destruction. C.

Ver. 16. These verses contain a graphic description of the career of the wicked man. Sin of every form and character is recklessly indulged in. One is reminded by it of Paul's statements in the epistle to the Romans, P.

REFLECTIONS. -- While I here behold the much persecuted and reproached Jesus, in his perfect right-eousness, justified by his Father, and avenged of all his enemies, Jewish, heathen, &c., let me think how complete and commodious a refuge God is in every time of trouble! In him we can never be moved. However brutish and cruel our enemies be, while we are weak we are strong. No false accusation need dismay us while we are conscious of our innocence, and have a gracious God to appeal to as our witness and judge. There is no kindness which he will not grant for the benefit of his people and the glory of his own perfections. Out of his favour there is no safety, and in it there is no danger. If he justify us none dare accuse or condemn us. And though our faith is truly a condition of our eternal happiness, dreadful and unavoidable is the ruin of impenitent sinners. Their contrivances and attempts against the godly shall prove means of their own destruction; when they who trusted in the Lord, and kept his way, triumph in notes of endless praise.

PSALM X.

always appears in its full development of such grace as the believer requires under his peculiar circumstances. Thus to Abraham (Ge. 17. 1) it was 'the Almighty God,' when his defenceless state constantly suggested the need of protection. Again to Moses in the solitudes of Horeb [Ex. 3. 14] it was 'I Am,' when the changes of years suggested the excellence of an unchanging God. But to that same Moses, in the midst of the 'thousands of Israel,' the name is expanded, as it were, to embrace all the accessities of the time, and assure the faith of Moses in discharge of his arduous duties, Ex. 34. 6, 7. And when, in the fulness of the time, God hath sent forth his Son (Ga. 4. 4), and the Spirit of his Son (Ga. 4. 6), the excellence of his name is still further manifested in the baptismal title and the apostolical benediction, revealing and glorifying Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, Mat. 28. 19; 2 Co. 13. 14. C.

Ver. 5. A little lower than the angels. The quotation of ver. 18 by our Lord, Mat. 12. 25; He. 2. 6, 7, evidences, beyond all doubt, that it is a description of Christ. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How glorious is the name of our exalted IMMANUEL, and of God in him! Quickly shall his kingdom fill both heaven and earth, however despicable its oracles, ordinances, and professors now appear to a carnal world. By the weakest instruments he accomplishes his greatest purposes, displays his power and grace, and treads and triumphs over Satan and his votaries. The glories of nature, but especially the graces of redemption, should continually lead our hearts to the contemplation of their glorious Author. How astonishing is it to see so many creatures subjected to miserable man; and especially to behold them all subjected to the once lowly Christ!

PSALM IX. Ver. 1. Of whom the Spirit here speaks, will be evident from considering first, that Ro. 15. 9 ascribes Ps. 18. 9 to Christ. This is the key of the interpretation. Next, with Ps. 18. 49, compare Ps. 57. 93 35, 73, then all with this opening verse ascribing praise to Jehovah with the whole heart, and with ver. 14, proposing to show forth 'all his praise,' and it will be impossible to deny that the psalm is prophetically spoken in the person of Christ. C.

REFLECTIONS.—All success granted by God to us ought to animate us to the most hearty praises and thanksgiving for that and all other deliverances. And while prosperity renders us thankful, our chief joy must be in the God of our mercies. It is himself, as the most High in Christ, that is our infallible security against fear or danger. And though the wicked prosper for a time, they are marked for lasting destruction. And when God begins he will make an end. Thrice happy are they, however poor and oppressed, who have this God of Jacob, this high Sovereign, this righteous Judge for the object of their knowledge and trust! The more they know of him the more they will trust Sweet shall be their songs of deliverance in in him. Sweet shall be their songs of deliverance in the church in the ordinances below, but especially in the heavenly Zion above. But while God remembers them in mercy, and grants their long waited for requests, fearfully will he manifest his holiness, equity, and power in the temporal and eternal ruin of his and their wicked enemies. But ought we not here chiefly to contemplate, with joy and thankfulness, the blessings of redemption, and the victories of our Redeemer over sin, death, and hell, Jews, heathens, and anti-christians, and all other incorrigible opposers; and to believe that we through him shall be more than con-

PSALM X. Ver. 1. Read Ps. 22. 1, 18, which the Holy Spirit expressly applies to Christ, then compare the whole of Ps. 221. with Ps. x., and their perfect parallelism will clearly show 992 that this psalm is a description of Christ cruelly persecuted by Herod, ungratefully betrayed by Judas, impiously denounced by Caiaphas, and unjustly condemned by Pilate. C.

Ver. 9. The poor, that is, the poor in spirit, whose hearts have been emptied of all vanity and self-righteousness, Mat. 5, 3. C.

Ver. 10. The true meaning of this verse seems to be 'crushed, he sinks down; the poor man falleth under the power of the mighty.' The reference is not to oppressor, but to the oppressed; not to the tyrant, but the victim. P.——Strong ones. Literally exemplified in that affected humility with which the Inquisition was wont to deliver the marryrs of truth to the secular arm, and hypocritically to commend her victims to mercy. C.

Ver. 12. Seing the tyranny and power of the wicked, and the helplessness of the oppressed, the psalmist appeals to God. He alone, infinite in wisdom and power, can succour and save the poor and needy. P.

Ver. 15. The appeal is here made to God as a righteous ruler. It is justice and not vengeance that the writer asks. There is nothing either harsh or cruel in justice. P.

Ver. 16. Heathen are perished out of his land. This expression refers the fulfilment of the psalm to that time when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, Re. 11. 15, and which shall eventuate in that glorious day, when 'Babylon shall be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all,' Re. 19. 21. C.

2 For, lo, the wicked bend their bow, they make ready their arrow upon the string, that they may privily shoot at the upright in heart.

3 If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?

4 The LORD is in his holy temple, the LORD'S throne is in heaven: ghis eyes behold, his eyelids try, the children of men.

5 The Lord trieth the righteous: but the wicked, and him that loveth violence, his soul

6 Upon the wicked he shall rain snares, fire and brimstone, and an horrible tempest:4 this shall be the *portion of their cup.

7 For the righteous LORD loveth righteousness; "his countenance doth behold the upright.

PSALM XII.

1 David, destitute of human comfort, craveth help of God. 3 He comforteth himself in the assurance of God's judgments on the wicked, 6 and in the faithfulness of his promises.

To the chief musician aupon Sheminith, A psalm of David.

ELP, LORD; for the godly man ceaseth; for the faithful fail from among the children of men.

2 They speak vanity every one with his neighbour: with flattering lips and with a double heart² do they speak.

3 The LORD shall cut off all flattering lips, and the tongue that speaketh proud things:3

4 Who have said, With our tongue will we prevail; our lips are our own: who is lord over us?

5 For the oppression of the poor, for the sighing of the needy, now will I arise, saith the LORD; I will set him in safety from him that puffeth at him.5

6 The words of the Lord are pure words; as silver tried in a furnace of earth, purified seven times.

7 Thou shalt keep them, O Lord, thou shalt preserve them⁶ from this generation for ever.

PSALM XIII.

1 David complaineth of God's delay to help him. 3 He prayeth for reventing grace. 5 He trusteth in the divine mercy.

To the chief musician, A psalm of David

HOW long wilt thou forget me, O LORD for ever? how long wilt thou bide thy OWa long wilt thou forget me, O LORD? face from me?2

2 How long shall I take counsel in my soul, honour his people's relation to, dependence on, and expectations from him, and to manifest his wonted readiness to appear in their behalf, he will quickly arise to punish them. And when God breaks the power, and in awful judgment manifests the wickedness, c. their enemies, he deals kindly with his people. When the wicked are cast down, they are lifted up to cafety, holiness, and honour. And he usually pours out upon them a remarkable spirit of humility, and of earnest supplication, as the mean of ushering in their deliverance.

PSALM XI. Ver. 3. If the foundations be destroyed, i.e. if all regard to the laws of God, all regard to order and justice, be gone, what safety can the most innocent or virtuous expect!

Ver. 6. Snares, fire, and brimstone, &c., signify all the terrible and unavoidable judgments which God executes upon the wicked in time and eternity; such as he executed upon Saul and his agents.

Ver. r. 'This psalm must be referred to the early times of David's life, when he had to maintain an unequal struggle against the unrelenting jealousy of Saul. Wei! might his friends despair: they were already imperilled on every side

- 4 Lest mine enemy say, I have prevailed against him; and those that trouble me rejoice when I am moved.
- 5 Buth I have trusted in thy mercy; my heart

5 Buth I have trusted in thy mercy; my heart shall rejoice in thy salvation.
6 I' will sing unto the Lord, because he hath dealt bountifully with me.

PSALM XIV.

1 David describeth the corruption of a natural man. 4 He convinceth the wicked by the light of their conscience. 7 He glorieth in the salvation of God.

To the chief musician, 4 psalm of David.

THE fool hath said in his heart, There is no abominable works; there is none that doeth good.

2 The Lord looked down from heaven upon the children of men, to see if there were any that did understand, and seek God.

2 The Salvation.

2 The Salvation of God.

2 The salvation of men, to see if there were any that did understand, and seek God.

- that did understand, and seek God.
- 3 They are all agone aside; they are all together become 'filthy; 'there is none that doeth good, no, not one.
- 4 Have all the workers of iniquity no knowledge? who heat up my people as they eat bread, and call not upon the LORD.
- 5 There were they in great fear:2 for God is in the generation of the righteous.3
- 6 Ye have kshamed the counsel of the poor, because the Lord is his refuge.
- 7 Oh that the salvation of Israel were come out of Zion! when the Lord bringeth back the captivity of his people, Jacob shall rejoice, and Israel shall be glad.

PSALM XV.

The proper character of a citizen of Zion. A psalm of David.

ORD, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill?

- 2 He that bwalketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart.
- 3 He that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his neighbour, nor taketh 2up a reproach against his neighbour.
- 4 In whose eyes da vile person is contemned: but he honoureth them that fear the Lord. He that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth
- 5 He sthat putteth not out his money to usury, nor htaketh reward against the innocent. He that doeth these things shall never be moved.

PSALM XVI.

1 David, in distrust of merits, and hatred of idolatry, fleth to God r preservation. 5 He showeth the hope of his calling, of a future for preservation. resurrection, and life everlasting.

Michtam1 of David.

PRESERVE me, O God: for in thee do I put my trust.2

- 2 O my soul, thou bhast said unto the LORD, Thou art my LORD: omy goodness extendeth not to thee:
- 3 But to the saints that are in the earth. and to the excellent,6 in whom is all my delight.
- 4 Their sorrows shall be multiplied that hasten after another god:7 their drink-offerings of blood will I not offer, nor stake up their $\begin{bmatrix} g & \text{Ex.} 23.13. \text{Jos.} 23.7. \\ \text{Ho.} 2.17. \end{bmatrix}$ names into my lips.

by the treachery of an unscrupulous foe, and now they saw opening before them an interminable vista of dangers, which would be the lot of the righteous in a time of anarchy and mix-rule. But the cowardly fears of his friends, so far from shaking David's trust in God, only gave him an occasion for pouring forth in song the firm and simple faith with which his heart was full.' The pasim divides itself into two parts:—the first part (ver. 1-3) contains the questions put to David by timid followers, suggesting flight. The second part contains David's reply, expressing unshaken confidence in God. P.

Ver. 6. So he rained upon Sodom and Gomorrah, which are 'set forth for an example,' Jude 7, and so will he punish the finally impenitent in 'the lake of fire,' Re. 20.15. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The saints' sorest temptations come as often from carnal friends as from their inveterate enemies; and often the most upright and blameless meet with the greatest malignity on earth. When wicked rulers have once unhinged the fundamental laws of equity, the greatest virtue often exposes men to the greatest danger. But while God is in Christ, in the church, and in heaven, they who trust in him need never despair. Nothing escapes his notice, and no-thing shall escape without a due reward. While in his afflicting the righteous he but tries them for their purification and honour, the holiness and equity of his nature demand that his unavoidable judgments should m a terrible manner reward the wicked.

PSALM XII. Ver. 1. The speaker here is 'poor and needy,' ver. 5. Now to find who he is, consult, first, Ps. 40. 17, then ver. 6-8, and compare He. 10. 7, 9; and thus finding that 'the poor and needy' is Christ, there will be no difficulty in discovering that this psalm is a prayer of Christ. C. Ver. 6. Seven being the amount of a perfect week, is the emblem of anything perfected by successive acts or exhibitions; so silver is refined from the alloy of baser metals by successive exposures to the fire; and so is the word of God separated from all the alloy of human misconceptions and errors, till it stands forth unadulterated truth—'the truth as it is in Jesus,' C.

REFLECTIONS.-It is fearfully ominous when those distinguished saints, who support nations or churches, fill their room. Perilous are the times when piety towards God and integrity towards men cease—when all men seek their own, not the things of Jesus Christ-when hypocrites by fair speeches deceive the Christ—when hypocrites by fair speeches deceive the simple! But pride must have a fall, either before the throne of grace, or into the depths of hell! And though God for a time may seemingly overlook his people, he will never forget, disregard, or cast them off. He best knows when to deliver; and if we have but faith he will never fail. When the saints' night of trouble is at the darkest, and their prayer fervent, their deliverance is near. While God's pure and precious promises stand fast in Christ, no increase, activity, or malice of wicked men shall ever be able utterly to malice of wicked men shall ever be able utterly to destroy or deceive his people.

PSALM XIII. Ver. 2. The 'Man of sorrows,' who knew no joy but 'the joy set before him,' here speaks while he 'endures the cross,' and bears 'the contradiction of sinners.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—How painful to an exercised be-liever is the sense of God's absence and frowns! An hour is an age without his love! But the most pre-cious saints are often exercised with long and constant sorrows: and their anxiety and vain contrivances to help themselves will but add to their burden, entangle them more and more, and bring them to the brink of despair. But though God hide, and frown, and smite, his love for all men cannot be broken. Let Satan and his agents triumph as they may in their fall, there is full hope of their recovery; nay, it is at hand. Trust in God's mercy and prayers poured into his bosom will quickly issue in great deliverance and joy.

PSALM XIV. REFLECTIONS.—How desperately wicked are human hearts! If all their thoughts were manifested, how horrible and shameful the sight!

ward corruption. And there is great reason to bless God for the riches of his grace, if anything good is implanted in us by his Spirit. How absurdly, and against conscience, must men act when they eat up with pleasure, hate, reproach, persecute, and oppress the people of God, or neglect prayer to him! Or when they attempt to shame and banter poor saints out of their religion and dependence on him! But if God be for us, who can be against us? Secret terrors shall apprehend our most jovial persecutors. How fervent are right desires for salvation through Christ; and how ravishing our enjoyment of it! For now is come Jesus, and his salvation and strength! Let Jews and Gentiles magnify the Lord, and rejoice in God their Saviour.

PSALM XV. Ver. 2. Let him that would search the Scriptures, not to give them a meaning, but to find it, read Je. 27.9; Ro. 3. 10, 11, 19, and compare them with the character described in this verse, and then say, Is not this certainly the Christ? C. Ver. 4. He that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not. Beareth true testimony, even when he knows it will be turned to his hurt. This Christ did when adjured by the high-priest and, on his own testimony, perverted by the high-priest and council, the righteous was condemned, Mat. 26.63-66. C.

REFLECTIONS.-Professors of religion have great need to examine themselves. Many have a place in God's church below who will never be admitted into his holy heaven. And if we would know our true state, God's word must be the sole standard, and his Spirit the great director and manager of our trial. It is not fair words, nor high pretences, but uniform obedience in heart and life to God's law, that will prove the reality of our grace. We must exercise ourselves to keep a conscience void of offence towards God and man; to keep good company; and to have no fellow-ship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather to reprove them. Though our holiness and virtue be not the foundation of our unchangeable happiness, they distinguished saints, who support nations or churches, are removed by death, while none are raised up to life! Men are very similar in sin, particularly in in-

PSALM XVII.

1 David, in confidence of his integrity, craveth defence of God against his enemies. 10 He showeth their pride and eagerness to ruin him. 13 He prayeth against them in confidence of his hope.

PSALM XVIII.

David's psalm of thanksgiving for God's mighty deliverances and manifold blessings.

To the chief musician, "A psaim of David the servant of the LORD, who spake unto the LORD the words of this song, in the day that "the LORD delivered him from the hand of all his enemies, and from the hand of Saul: And he said.

WILLs love thee, O Lord, my strength.1 2 The Lord is my rock, and my fortress, and my bdeliverer; my God, my strength, in whom I will trust; my buckler, and the horn of my salvation, and my high tower.

3 In will call upon the LORD, owho is worthy to be praised: so shall I be saved from mine enemies.

4 The sorrows of death compassed me, and the floods of ungodly3 men made me afraid.

5 The sorrows4 of hell compassed me about; the quares of death prevented me.

PSALM XVI. Ver. 5. The Lord and his fulness, answerable to every need, every desire, is represented as a lot or portion, in allusion to the shares of Canaan, which were divided by lot, Nu. xxiv.; and to the shares of liquor in cups at feasts; importing how permanent, unalterable, refreshing, and strengthening he is to the enjoyers.

Ver. 10. Hell, with respect to David or Christ, cannot signify the place of the damned; for thither they never went: but it may include great distress of spirit, the grave, and the state of the dead.

Ver. 4. Another—god is not in the original, and the word supplied should rather be Messiah. The Jews have sought another, and have been in sorrow for upwards of 1800 years. C. Ver. 5. Lot. The resolution in ver. 3 is spoken by Messiah as a priest. The tribe of Levi had no inheritance but Jehovah: Messiah has the same, and besides is 'heir of all things.' C. Ver. 9. 'My glory rejoiceth;' i.e. my soul rejoiceth. The soul being the most dignified—the noblest part of man, is termed in poetic imagery his glory. P.

REFLECTIONS.-Trust in God does not merit but it secures divine preservation, as God cannot disappoint one who believes his word or rests on his newcovenant characters. Our holiness cannot profit God but it marks us his, and tends to our advantage; and next to fellowship with God that with ourselves is the most excellent and useful. But the more a believer advances in holiness, the more humble thoughts he will have of himself, in view of the pure and all-sufficient EHOVAH. They who delight in God will delight in JEHOVAH. Iney who delight in God will delight in those who bear his image as the most excellent on earth. Such as have Jesus Christ as their atonement, and God in him, need no idols or other sacrifices. And if we want to banish idolatry, the most distant appearances of it ought to be avoided and abhorred. But happy are they who have God as their portion, their wealth and comfort by his own gospel grant! This secures against want as well as against ruin. This secures direction in time, comfort in death, and glory through eternity. And O how pleasant death and eternity appear, when Christ is considered as our way, as our forerunner, and God in him as our everlasting ALL in ALL.

PSALM XVII. Ver. 1. Prayer is called meditation, because our requests ought to be seriously considered before we present them to God. It is called a lifting up of our souls, and pouring out of our hearts, because our requests must be the earnest desires of our 995 soul. It is called supplication, seeking, knocking, in-quiring, to denote the humility and earnestness of our petitions. It is represented as a crying, sighing, groaning, and breathing, to signify our great pressures and necessities, and the great earnestness of our desires after relief. It is represented as a lacking to after relief. It is represented as a looking to, talking with, and taking hold of God, to denote the humble familiarity, importunate earnestness, and patient resignation necessary therein. From the gestures used in it, it is represented as a bowing, kneeling, falling down, or standing before God; and, from its acceptableness to God, it is represented as odours or incense.

Ver. 1. Hear the right. A prayer for God to hear the right, the absolutely right, can never be the prayer of a sinner, who must ever cry, 'God be merciful.' It is the prayer of 'Jesus Christ the righteous,' 'who knew no sin,' and who ever liveth to be a sinner sinn for what interesting for we can the ground of his praffect interesting. Christ the righteous, 'who knew no sin,' and who ever liveth to make intercession for us on the ground of his perfect righteous-make intercession for us on the ground or ms periett nginteousness. C.

Ver. 3. It is manifest from the scope of this whole psalm that the enemies to whom the author refers had, like Job's friends, charged him with some secret crimes. He repudiates the charge.
He calls upon God, the searcher of hearts, to examine and try him, so as to testify to his innocence. The psalmist does not presume to declare his purity before God; he does not speak of personal holiness. He refers simply to the charges brought against him by reckless persecutors. P.

Ver. 15. The psalmist here contrasts his hopes and aspirations with those of the mere worldling. He does not rest his happiness on temporal things. He looks beyond earth to a heavenly inheritance and home. The presence and favour of God can alone satisfy him. He hopes for and believes in a participation in the divine nature and graces. The doctrine of a future state and of a resurrection is here clearly shadowed forth. P.

REFLECTIONS.—Happy are they who, when traduced by men, have the testimony of a good conscience to their uprightness before God; his providence will manifest injured innocence at last! And happy are they who in all their trials improve God's word as their preservative from evil; and who, assisted by his gracious influence, watch over their heart, their tongue, their feet, cleaving to that which is good, and abhor-ring that which is evil! But not the strongest saint hath a fund of grace to support himself, without con-stant supplies from Jesus Christ our living fountain. And a deep sense of our own weakness and insufficiency is the surest way to be strong in the Lord and ciency is the surest way to be strong in the Loru and in the power of his might. Every saint walks in a slippery path, where many watch for his halting. He ought therefore always to watch and pray that he faint not. Our salvation is by faith, and is of infinite love from first to last. PSALM XVIII. Ver. 3. Mine enemies. Whose enemies? A somewhat similar psalm is said to have been spoken by David on his deliverance from all his enemies and from Saul; and the day was most appropriate for celebrating, not typically, but prophetic cally, the glorious deliverance of Messiah. Therefore being called Jehovah he is God. C.

REFLECTIONS.-- How close and marvellous is the connection between Christ and his people, that the same relations of God, the same words and works of God, and exercises towards God, will apply to both! Let Jesus then be at once my Saviour, my Forerunner, and my Pattern. Pleasant and profitable is God to the souls that find him. He is their ALL and IN ALL! Sure is their help in time of need who trust in and love Sure is their neip in time of need who trust in and love him! though God may take the most awful manner to answer the prayers of his people in delivering them out of their distress, and exalting them to safety and loy. Those deliverances demand the most solemn and joy. Those deliverances demand the most solemn and hearty thanksgivings, which are from great and imminent danger, and in exact answer to earnest prayers, and which are granted by wonderful appearances, in the midst of great difficulties, and have great and lasting good fruits. Happy are they who, interested in Jesus' righteousness, have their corruptions subdued by his grace, and are by his Sprint enabled to conquer Jesus' righteousness, have their corruptions subdued by his grace, and are by his Spirit enabled to conquer every spiritual foe! God fights for them! who can be against them! What knowledge and skill—what strength—what activity—what courage—what protection—what success and victory—what a high throne—is allotted them by the living, the faithful, the powerful, and unparalleled God of their salvation! By tul, and unparalleled God of their salvation! By firm taith may such expect the Lord's perfecting all that grace and glory which concerns them.

PSALM XIX. Ver. r. In this beautiful psalm natural and revealed religion are sketched in outline. It is shown that in each God, as a God of wisdom, power, and holiness, is placed before the mind of man. The works of nature as seen during the day, the giories of the starry skies in the night season, proclam to men of every nation and language the being and attributes of the Creator. The law of the Lord, recorded in his Word—perfect, The God of him that values his birthright. 2. Of the exile trust-pure, holy, sanctifying in its influence, affords a still clearer and deeper insight into the character and government of Jehovah than the contemplation of his works. P.

Ver. 2. As the spiritual eye 'seeth him that is invisible,' Mat. XI. 27, so the spiritual ear heareth that which is inaudible. So says the dying believer,

I see a hand you cannot see, that beckons me away;
I hear a voice you cannot hear, that says, I must not stay.'—C.

Ver. 4. Their line, &c. These words are applied to the preaching of the apostles (Ro. 10. 18), whose silent writings are now speaking with the power of the Spirit to all ends of the earth. C. Ver. 6. This is literally fulfilled in the natural heavens, as the light and heat of the sun alternately reach the poles.—Note, So grace visits the darkest and the coldest heart. Even so, Lord, visit ours! C.

grace visits the darkest and the coldest neart. Even so, 2010, visit ours! C.

Ver. 13. Upright ... innocent. To none can the character of upright and innocent truly apply but to Christ, all others have reason to be ashamed and repent in dust and ashes.—Great transgression. From all our sins which he bore in his own body on the tree, 1 Pe. 2. 24. One sin of his own would have invalidated his sacrifice. But he knew no sin—therefore sinners were saved, He. 9. 14. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How inexcusable are atheists and idolaters, when the ever-obvious heavens, the regular succession of nights and days, and the enlightening and warming sun, teach men so much of God! But much more they who enjoy the heavens, the firmament of the gospel-church, all illuminated by Jesus Christ of the gospel-church, all illuminated by Jesus Christ the Sun of Righteousness, and his oracles, ordinances, and ministers, if they offend! Happy those hearts in which his word, so pure, so perfect, so true, so righteous, so precious, and pleasant, is hid: and in which its enlightening, instructing, converting, comforting, nourishing, and healing influence is felt! The more we look into this blessed glass, the more cause we shall see of deep humiliation before God, on account of the number and strength of our secret corruptions. But terrible are presumptuous sins—sins done against light terrible are presumptuous sins—sins done against light and love! and yet the best need to watch and pray against them. Great then is the mercy that all our salvation from sin, and all the acceptance of our holy services, is in Christ the beloved and his infinitely valuable representations.

Ver. 9. Evidently a prayer to Christ the King and Head of his church, and whom men are bound to honour even as they honour the Father, Jn. 5. 23. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Neither piety nor power can exempt men from sore troubles. All then have need for prayer; and even the greatest need this assistance from the meanest. But what an almighty helper, a kind accepter, and a liberal bestower is God in Christ, as the first of his people! Such as make him the as the God of his people! Such as make him the object of their trust shall soon have reason to make him the ground of their praise. An assured trust in him is the best way to preferment and establishment. They who renounce all their confidences, and persevere in prayer to him, shall abide in his love, and be assured of his protection.

PSALM XXI. Ver. 3. Pure gold, the emblem of kingly power over the world, and in the church, that 'crown of righteous-ness' which Jesus won, and which through his glace believer receive, 2 Ti. 4.8. C.

Ver. 8. At this point the address of the church is generally represented as turning directly to Messiah the Son of God. But there appears no good reason for this supposed change, which neither the grammar o, the passage nor parallel scriptures require. Does it not rather appear an address to the Father who has scated, at his right hand, his beloved Son until he shall have put all things under his feet, and destroyed even the last of his enemies? 1 Co. 15. 24–28. Behold how fixed is his kingdom and dignity in the infinite, everlasting, and unchangeable wisdom, power, mercy, equity, goodness, and truth of the Most High! Behold the inexpressible judgment which kindles upon and destroys his Jewish —his heathen—his antichristian—and other incorrigible enemies! But rejoice, my soul, in this God thy Saviour. TONE CARVED WORK IN THE SYNAGOGUE, CAPERNAUM — WHERE CHRIST HEALED PETER'S MOTHER-IN-LAW AND MANY OTHERS. [PSALMS, XXI:1.]—
"The king shall joy in thy strength, O Lord; and in thy salvation how greatly shall he rejoice!" This first verse of the twenty-first Psalm is accepted as a prophecy relating to the mission of Christ. We give to illustrate this portion of Scripture a piece of stone work in the synagogue at Capernaum. This view was photographed on Wednesday,

May 9, 1894. It was with difficulty that we reached the site of this synagogue that originally stood in Capernaum, because of the deep tangled mass of weeds and thorn bushes. The relic we see is supposed to have formed part of the synagogue which was found in Capernaum at the time of our Savior, and in which he delivered many of his discourses. Christ performed more miracles in Capernaum than in any other place. We are, as we stand in the presence of this stone, at least upon ground made sacred by the words and deeds of our Lord.

David's confidence in God's care and goodness. A psalm of David.

THE LORD is my shepherd; I bshall not want.

2 Hee maketh me to lie down in green pastures:2 he leadeth me beside the still waters.3

3 Hed restoreth my soul: he leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake.

4 Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, gI will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod4 and thy staff they comfort me.

5 Thou *preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies: thou anointest⁵ my head with oil; my cup 'runneth over.

6 Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: kand I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever.7 is generally, as history proves, the reward of their sin.

And the ruin of the wicked, or those who reject Jesus Christ, is brt the reward of their own sin.

PSALM)... II. Ver. 1. Forsaken me. These words, adopted by our Lord in the dark hour of his crucifixion, sufficiently demonstrate that the whole psalm is a prayer of Christ. Forsaken is interpreted by Jar from helping. God cannot forsake in presence, but he may as to immediate forth-putting of power to deliver. Compare ver. 16, 18, 22, with Jn. 20, 25, 27; Mat. 27, 35; He. 2.12. C. Ver. 12. Many bulls. Prophetic language, that it may suit all generations, must be emblematical; for words change, but emblems abide. These bulls, accordingly, are the emblems of aggressive power—the ecclesiastical rulers of the Jews, and the imperial rulers of the Roman empire, by whom Christ was persecuted to the death. C. Ver. 13. Gaped. .. mouths. The marginal reading is better, and describes the bellowing of the bulls against their victim, well exemplified in the cry of the multitude, 'Away with him, away with tim: crucify him, crucify him!' C. Ver. 16. They pierced my hands and my feet. The translation of this clause has been much disputed. The Hebrew words in our received text will scarcely bear out the present rendering. The word rendered 'they pierced' almost any Hebrew scholar would translate' as a lion,' and thus Gesenius and Hengstenberg translate it. It is worthy of note that some ancient MISS, have a different reading, slightly changing the final letter of the word, and thus making it signify they pierced,' with this reading agree all the ancient versions, and I therefore conclude that it is the true reading. It is possible that some fanatical Jew, finding that this passage was applied by Christians to our Lord, changed the original form of the word, and thus attempted to corrupt the text and obscure the meaning is well explained to a reature of imagination. The meaning is well explained in a beautiful and consolatory proverb, 'Man's extremity is God's opportunity.' C.

Ver. 26. Your heart, &c. Your heart, your affections, being set upon things which are above, Col. 3.3. Christ, who is eternal life with the Father, I Jn. 1.2, will be your life, Col. 3.4. and give you eternal life, Jn. 10. 28. C.

Ver. 20. Fat upon earth, &c. Abundance of food produces forgetfulness of God, Is. 5. 12. To remedy this evil tendency, the Father, even by the example of the Son, always united zworship with eating. So likewise does the apostolic injunction, I Co. 10. 31. The same principle is still more specially developed in the holy feast of the Lord's supper, I Co. 10. 16, 11. 28. C.

Ver. 30. A seed. Not seeds, as of many, but a seed; the one seed, they that are born of water, even of the Spirit, Jn. 3. 5; I Pe. 1. 23. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How fearful is the nature of sin, which drew such tremendous desertion and pain upon God's only begotten Son, when he came to the world! With the most holy resignation ought God's with the most noty resignation ought God's hidings and frowns to be endured, when they are sanctified by Jesus Christ's bearing them as our foreruner; and should be attended with kind thoughts of God, trust in him, and fervent prayers for deliverance. What earnest supplications are occasioned by a deep sense of need! But it is happy, in great distress, to have our blessed relation to God, and our own and others' experience of former deliverances, to encourage us to before the Lord exceedingly were these dogs, these bulls, these wicked men, who with devils thus raged against the great God our Saviour! But, oh! what a debt of love and of praise the redeemed owe to their Lord, who so bare their sins, their griefs! And what ought they not cheerfully to suffer for his sake! What tidings—what supplies—what conquests—what continuance-what glories of grace-issue from the sufferings of our great IMMANUEL! Himself opens the triumphant song, and exhibits his experience for the comfort of his distressed brethren; and with joy declares his fort of his distressed brethren; and with joy declares his adherence to all his covenant engagements. Sweet is the entertainment of his flesh and blood—yea, of all the fulness of God which he has prepared for the poor, the afflicted, and meek! Precious and lasting is their infe who by faith feed upon nim! He goes forth persuading the nations high and low, to the obedience of faith. Let then his cause be oppressed as it may, in every age it will prove triumphant.

PSALM XXIII. Ver. 1. This is an exquisite spiritual pastoral, and is a characteristic ode of the shepherd-king. The imagery, taken from shepherd life, is graphic and appropriate. The Good Shepherd leading his flock to the best pastures, to the brink of the quiet waters, along safe paths. His watchful care dispels all idea of lear; and permanent peace is finally secured. P. Ver. 3. There are no paths of righteousness but those trodden by Christ, Ro. 3: 10: 5.17, 19; therefore the speaker is Christ, for he walked in righteousness. C.

REFLECTIONS.—O the advantages, the pleasures, of experimental godliness! God, whose knowledge and care are infinite—God, who is ALL and giveth all—is his people's Shepherd! What can they then want when all the fulness of God is opened for their supply! He makes them to rest and feed in the pastures of his ordinances and promises; and leads them, for their refreshment, to the still waters of his gospel truth, gracious influence, redeeming blood, and everlasting love. He restores their souls when under Amidst their unnumbered enemies of lusts, of devils, and of men, not only necessaries, but even abundant comforts, are allowed them. The mercy and goodness of God, in streams of spiritual and temporal blessings, attend the faithful, till at last they are for ever filled with all the fulness of God in his heavenly temple.

PSALM XXIV. Ver. 1. Earth is the Lord's. It is his by right of creation, Jn. 1.3: it is his by right of redemption, Ep. 1.14: it is his by right of final victory, 1 Co. 15. 26, of which this psalm is a prophetic celebration. C.

Ver. 3. This is an inquiry after him who has been described, Ps. 72. 6, an abiding priest to make intercession in the holy place.

Ver. 4. Here are two positive and two negative characteristics that never belonged to any son of man but Christ. This psalm is therefore a prophetic description of Christ. C.

Ver. 6. This is the generation, that is, they who appear at his right hand to inherit the blessing, and receive the gift of right-cousness, when the earth becomes the Lord's by final victory, 1 Co. 15, 26, and by a new creation, 2 Pc. 3: 13.—0 Jacob. Jacob, being interpreted, signifies supplanter; and he supplanted profame Essu by purchasing the blessing. As such, the name an appropriate title of Christ, who purchased the heirship of all things at the cost of his own blood, 1 Co. 6. 20: 7. 23.—Selah.

See note on Ps. 3. 2. C.

Ver. 7. Evertasting doors. This can be no allusion to either tabernacle or temple; for David never imagined their gates or doors to be evertasting. The evertasting gates and doors are those of righteousness, Ps. 118. 19, by which Christ has entered those the entered alone, 'mighty in battle,' ver. 8; the other after the resurrection of his saints, when he enters with them and his angels,' Lord of hosts,' Mat. 16. 27. REFLECTIONS.—How great is Christ, who is Lord.

REFLECTIONS.—How great is Christ, who is Lord of all! Surely it is proper that all persons should praise and serve him; and that all things should be received as from his hand and used to his honour. But what change of state and nature-what holiness in heart and life-is necessary to constitute us true members of his church on earth, or inhabitants of his heaven above! There is great need of serious self-examination, lest he at last reject us; for without holiness no man shall see the Lord. But however sincere our hearts, blameless our lives, or fervent our prayers, not these, but a living faith in the Lord Jesus, must found our title to eternal felicity. O how transcend ently glorious is Jesus' entrance into manhoc l—his exaltation to heaven—and his entrance into men's hearts and assemblies on earth! And, in fine, his solemn return to his celestial mansions, attended by all the ransomed millions, after the last judgment?

Then let him turn to He. 10. 5, and compare the same with Ps. 40. 6-8, and he will find that he who confesses his iniquities is no other than Christ; no other than he who, though he 'knew no sin,' yet 'bore all our sins in his own body;' yea, upon whom 'the Lord laid the iniquities of us all.' REFLECTIONS.—An interest in God and his love is the surest protection from shame and danger; and the more our hearts and desires are weaned from earthly vanities, and set upon God and things above, we are the more sure that our hopes shall not be disappointed. He that believeth shall not be ashamed. God never fails them that seek him. But the short-lived triumphs of obstinate transgressors shall issue in everlasting misery and confusion. When we pray for ourselves we must never forget our brethren. Being by nature blind and impotent, our whole direction in, and strength on him as the God of their salvation shall ever wait in vain.

Hopes fixed on his everlasting love can never be disappointed; and what others have found an infallible support we may boldly depend upon. Sins of youth, though pardoned by God, ought to be remembered by us for our humiliation. And our only hope of God's favour must be founded on a living faith in Jesus' blood. All true knowledge of God and the support of God and the support of the his ways, and wisdom to walk therein, spring from his own mercy and faithfulness. Sense of sin must drive us to implore the forgiveness and destruction of it: but no sin, however great, ought to render us desperate. God, by his infinite power and grace, can pardon the greatest as well as the least. And the more sin God forgives to us, the more we are obliged to love, fear, and serve him: and the more we serve him, the greater shall be our happiness in life and intimacy with him. Whatever God does, however afflicting, shall work together for our good. Though God and men should steadfastness in Christ or his way must be thankfully concur to entangle us in nets of trouble, and Satan disacribed to their faith. tress our minds with his accusations, the fruit of all is not to destroy us but to purge away our sin. But our kindliest resignation to afflictions must be attended with prayer for the removal of them. Though we must love our enemies, we must pray against their wickedness. And while we earnestly study the utmost uprightness in our practice, the church in general, and every member thereof, ought to share in our fervent

PSALM XXVI. Ver. I. Mine integrity. No conscious sinner ever called for judgment, but for mercy; none ever asserted integrity, being guilty of sin. This is therefore a prayer of Christ, who, though he bors our sins, knew no sin; and who, on behalf of his redeemed members, pleads his perfect righteousness. C. Ver. 3. Who can boldly say unto God, I have walked in thy truth—not merely man's truth, but God's truth? Adam did not so walk; Evr did not so walk; Aaron did not so walk; David did not so walk: the aposties did not so walk. All these, as their histories testify, came shut of the glory of God. Christ alone so walked, he alone could so affirm.—Note, How blessed are believers, to whom the promises of mercy, pardon, and salvation are all confirmed by Him who is the truth. C.

REFLECTIONS. - While here we behold Jesus Christ in a figure, as holy, harmless, undefiled, and separated from sinners, and wash our heart and hands in rated from sinners, and wash our heart and hands in his blood and grace, let us observe how comfortable under calumny it is to possess conscious innocence. They who trust in God are kept by his mighty power through faith unto salvation; and the faith or sense of Jesus' love, and a due regard to his word, will tend to restrain from sin. But nothing is more dangerous to souls than fellowship with the ungodly. To sit long amidst light, vain, and unprofitable discourse, perhaps more deadens the heart than that which is notoriously profane. No man appears really gracious who does profane. No man appears really gracious who does not study to avoid the company of the wicked. No man rightly approaches God's ordinances but in the way of washing his heart and life in the sin expiating and subwashing instruct and he in the sin expiating and subduing fountain of Jesus' blood and Spirit. None can love God without loving his ordinances, and counting his service perfect freedom, and his works of grace inexpressibly marvellous. However joyous the assemblies of sinners may be now, it will be infinitely dreadful to be explored with the inful to be gathered with them in death or in the last And even those who walk in their uprightness, must before God stand on the foundation of Jesus' redeeming blood and infinite mercy; and all their PSALM XXVII. Ver. 2. My foes came upon me to eat up my flesh. When Satan, who has the power of death, He. 2. 14, and the high-priest, who had the power of indictment, and Pilate, who had the power of indictment in the power of condemnation, came against me, to deliver me up to the devouring grave. C.

Ver. 5. David never escaped from trouble; but Christ is gone into the heavens, waiting till all his enemies be made his foot-stool.

Ver. 10. It is not to be overlooked that, after the commencement of our Lord's ministry, Joseph, his reputed father, is not mentioned, being most probably dead; and when his mother and brethren endeavoured to approach him, Mat. 12. 46; Mar. 3. 32–35; Lu. 8. 19–21, he defines his nearest and dearest relatives to be 'those who hear the word of God, and do it.' Now that literally, and also in this spiritual sense, Christ was forsaken of all earthly relations, is evident from the history of his malicious trial and barbarous crucifixion, Mat. 26. 56; Jn. 16. 32. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Happy are they to whom Jesus Christ is a blessed instructor, saviour, strengthener, and quickener! He is at once the source, the price, and quickener! He is at once the source, the price, the means, the matter, and the bestower of all our spiritual and eternal blessings. Where faith in him, through his word, keeps strong and steady, no enemies or dangers can make us either to fear or faint. To live near him, and to behold his and his Father's glory in ordinances here, and in heaven above, is the pleasure the protection the honour of a saint and the sure, the protection, the honour of a saint, and the matter of his thankful praise. Nothing can be dearer to his heart than divine encouragements to intimate and gracious fellowship with God. A sense of his favour is the greatest help and comfort under manifold troubles and warre. troubles and wants. His instructions direct to safe and honourable walking amidst the most malignant enemies. And though all men should forsake us, or even hate us, it is enough if he love and support us. Faith in his promises and characters will keep us from fainting amidst raging lusts, powerful temptations and distresses, and enemies unnumbered. And the more of his goodness we experience in waiting for him, the more we should encourage others to patient expectations of his grace.

PSALM XXVIII. Ver. 2. The construction of these prayers, which are all in the speaker's own name, sufficiently testify to him who knows the Scriptures, Job 14, 13-16; 16, 23, 26, that this is a psalm, not of a sinner asking in Christ's name, but of Christ asking in his own right. C. Ver. 4. Such prayers throughout the Psalms have often afforded matter of scorn or reproach to the infidel, and called forth timid and ignorant apologies from believers. The answer to all such

PSALM XXX.

1 David praiseth God for his deliverance. 4 He exhorteth others to praise him by the example of God's dealing with him.

A psalm and song at the adedication of the house of David.

WILL^b extol thee, O Lord; for thou hast lifted me up, and hast not made my foes to rejoice over me.1

2 O' LORD my God, I cried unto thee, and thou hast healed me.

3 Od Lord, thou hast brought up my soul from the grave;2 thou hast kept me alive, that I should not go down to the pit.

4 Singe unto the Lord, O ye saints of his, and give thanks at the remembrance3 of his holiness.

5 For his anger endureth but a moment; in his favour is life: weeping may endure for a night,5 but joy6 cometh in the morning.

6 And in my prosperity I said, I shall never be moved.

7 Lord, by thy favour thou hast made my mountain to stand strong:7 thou didst hide thy face, and I was troubled.

8 Ik cried to thee, O LORD; and unto the Lord I made supplication.

9 What profit is there in my blood, when I go down to the pit? shall the dust praise thee? shall it declare thy truth?

10 Hear, O LORD, and have mercy upon me: LORD, be thou my helper.

11 Thou hast turned for me my mourning into dancing: thou hast put off my sackcloth, and girded me with gladness;

cavils is easy—this is that very thing which God will do—and which therefore the believer, even Christ in the days of his flesh, might justly pray him to do. C.—This is a prayer for justice. It is surely right to seek it and to pray for it. The psalmist desires that by the execution of a righteous judgment the wicked may be restrained from evil, and God's people saved from persecution. There is no evidence here of malice or vindictiveness. P.

Ver. 11. The Lord will bless his people with peace. Life at best is a variable climate, and visited by many storms. Still the man justified by faith enjoys peace of conscience, and when the storms of life are over, all will be calm in heaven. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Deep distress should awaken strong cries to God. Not the Jewish holy of holies, but Christ, is our oracle, in which dwells all the fulness of the Godhead bodily; and through him our prayers are sure to speed. What a burden to exercised saints are sin and sinners while they live in this world! Seducing sinners are always busy; and they who would avoid their ruin must shun their ways. But great are the thankful praises which saints owe to their God for the mercies which have been granted in answer to their prayer, and which faith assures them he will grant. And what almighty power and grace Jesus Christ, and REFLECTIONS.—Alas! how shameful it is that we should need repeated calls to the solemn worship and service of God; and that great men are but seldom shining examples of devotion! Formal ceremony of words is too often the whole of our worship, which is neither performed in Jesus' holy name, nor in beautiful holiness of heart. But infinitely great is the glory of JEHOVAH! His voice in thunder, in stormy tempests, is not more awful and effective than his voice in his word is on my heart, and hath been, or shall be, in the fear and great joy,' Mat. 28. 8, to communicate the news, C. Ver. 7. Didst hide thy face, &c. Jesus, the Man of Sorrows, realized this sad description: 'Now is my soul troubled; and what shall I say?' See also Mat. 26. 38. And hear of the hidings of his Father's face, when he exclaims, 'My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?' Mat. 27. 46. C. Ver. 9. The meaning of this verse is:—'What advantage would it be to God's kingdom on earth if I should die?' Could my lifeless body—my mouldering remains—advance his cause? Could the dust of the tomb declare the truth of God to mankind?' It is in this bold form that the psalmist pleads with his God. P.

REFLECTIONS.—To what plagues and sickness the best of saints are by sin obnoxious in this world! But the prayer of faith is always availing under every But the prayer of faith is always availing under every trouble. And there is great ground of praise and thanksgiving in every deliverance which comes through Jesus Christ. How delightful to saints is God's infinite and sanctifying holiness? His favours are greatly beneficial: and short-lived, but preciously fruitful, are his frowns and his people's griefs. Fellowship with him on earth, and chiefly in heaven, turns their mourning into love unspeakable and full of glory. Outward into joys unspeakable and full of glory. Outward lieve and pray amidst depths of distress. not our own advantages, but the services we can render to God on earth, that should make us desire to live! Quickly God changes the lot and frame of his people, and fills their lips with his praise. And it is delightful when high songs of redeeming love are remarkably begun on earth.

PSALM XXXI. Ver. 6. I have hated, &c. Could Christ hate? Does God hate? See, for answer, Ps. Iv. But, as amongst men, there is a most unholy love, so likewise is there a most unholy hatred: but this cannot gainsay there being in God and his Christ a holy love to what is good, and as holy a hatred of what is evil. C.

Ver. 13. There is not upon record such a remarkable illustration of the deep depravity of the human heart, as the continuous stream of slander that it poured out upon the spotless Lamb of God—'Friend of publicans and sinners,' wine-bibber, glutton, madman, devil-possessed, devil-aided, Sabbath-breaker, seditious rebel against Casar, impious blasphemer against God, formed the staple of those calumnies that pursued him through life—and finally succeeded in conducting him to the cross. C.

Ver. 15. My times are in thy hand. Everything relating to the manifestation of the Son lies in the hand of the Father. He sends him forth in the 'fulness of the times,' Ga. 4. 4; and the 'times and the seasons' of his glorious coming 'the second time without sin unto salvation'—it is not for us to know, for 'the Father hat put them in his own power,' Ac. 1. 7. C.

REELECTIONS.—Trust in God never issues in con-

REFLECTIONS.—Trust in God never issues in con-REFLECTIONS.—Trust in God never issues in confounding disappointments. Both Jesus and Jeho-Vah's righteousness secures to believing supplicants a speedy deliverance out of every trouble and snare; and fervent prayers in Jesus' name insure a quick and comfortable answer. The more we commit ourselves to God, the more we shall experience of his faithfulness in perfectioning his promises; and the more we know of omiortable answer. The more we commit ourselves to God, the more we shall experience of his faithfulness of casting us down into the depths of desertion and trouble. There is great need then to be always humble and watchful amidst smiles of Providence, and to be-renounce everything else as lying vanities. And his unceasing mercies, his sympathy under trouble, his protection from evils, and his increase of blessings, deserve our constant returns of praise. But though the sins of saints may not damn them, yet they often severely distress them on earth. And through much conformity to Christ, in the enduring of hatred, reproach, and per-secution, they must enter into the celestial kingdom of God. The wicked often abandon themselves to the God. The wicked often abandon themselves to the most false and virulent reproach against Jesus Christ and his people: but distress, death, and judgment will quickly silence them. Meanwhile, God's present protection of his people, and the unbounded happiness of heaven, are comforts more than sufficient for the saints to balance all their troubles on earth. Often his great and unexpected mercies shame their unbelief and reand unexpected mercies shame their unbelief and re-buke their carnal fear. And O what reason the best have to bewail their repeated and deep despondencies under trouble, and to encourage others to avoid them! For when we consider our God and his mercies, alas! how cold is our love, how weak our faith, and languid

PSALM XXXII. Ver. 2. The apostle applies this and the foregoing verse (Ro. 4. 6) to explain the blessedness of the man to whom the Lord imputes righteousness without works, even the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all them that believe. Ro. 3. 32. C.

Ver. 3. When I kept silence. Upon two remarkable occasions. Christ kept silence. Before the treacherous and guilty accusers of the woman, Jn. 8. 6-8: and again, before Caiaphas and Pilate, Mat. 26. 63: 27. 14, as it had been prophesied, Is. 53. 7. While he thus kept silence for a little from reproving hypocrites, or instructing and comforting penitents, or from defending himself against false accusations, his bones waxed old—premature old age came on—through the previous and subsequent roaring which, with this brief interval, his sorrows wrung from him all the day long. ledged by those who will not agree patiently to search the Scriptures. But let those who determine by the grace of God to examine, see Ps. 40. 12, compare Ps. 22. 2, 5, and then ask, who speaks? Ps. 40. 12. To find the answer, compare ver. 6-8 with He. 10. 5-7, and the speaker is found to be Christ. But how could Christ eonfess sin, seeing he knew no sin? He confessed the sins of his mystical body the church, Ep. 1. 22, 231 5. 30. Those sins which he bore in his own body on the tree, I Pe. 2.
44. Those 'iniquities of us all,' which the Lord laid upon him, Is. 53.6, 11, 12. Sins and iniquities that were his by onlaying and bearing, as his righteousness is ours by gift and impartation. C.

REFLECTIONS. - Dreadful is the nature of sin! It, and nothing else, renders us miserable. But rich is the grace of God, and efficacious the merit of Jesus' blood, which freely removes it. And justification through faith in Christ constantly promotes integrity and holiness of heart and life! But the remains of sin must be purged out by sore troubles and wounding convictions. For there is a close connection between gospel repentance and pardon of sin. It is not, however, our repentance, but God's mercy in Christ and our faith, that is the cause of our pardon. Hopeful is a sinner's case when he is once brought to humble applications to a gracious God, who is more ready to pardon than we are to pray for it.

They who seek him, even in trouble, shall surely find him; the more imminently terrible their danger, the more shall his grace and love be magnified in their salvation. And it is no small encouragement to their seeking of God in their distress, that others, like themselves, have found mercy in like cases. But great is the protection, preservation, deliverance, instruction, and direction which believers in Christ constantly find, while the impenitent are loaded with sorrows everlasting and unnumbered. It is necessary then to receive his instructions, and to bend before his warnings, that we may rejoice in his mercy and triumph in his praise.

PSALM XXXIII. Ver. 12. This is a national psalm, an expression of faith by an entire people. And though it be descriptive of a state never yet fully realized, the divine counsel will not be frustrated; and not merely individuals, but nations and peoples, shall yet be born of the Spirit to national salvation. Ro. 11. 7-26. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How great, glorious, and good is our God! and as extensive is the matter and reasonable the exercise of our praise. All that God is in himself, all that he hath declared in his word, all that he hath done in his works, is the matter of his gift and 1005 find, while the impenitent are loaded with sorrows subject of our songs. Thrice happy are his faithful people, to whom he is their Portion, their kind Obpeople, to whom he is their Portion, their kind Observer, their powerful Protector, their almighty Deliverer, their gracious Provider, and constant Preserver! The thoughts of his universal power, influence, and operations, and the vanity of all things beside him, should effectually engage us to contented resignation of ourselves and all that we have into his hand.

21 For our heart shall rejoice in him; because we have trusted in his holy name.

22 Leta thy mercy, O Lord, be upon us, according as we hope in thee.

2 Take hold of shield and buckler, and stand up for mine help.2

3 Draw out also the spear, and stop the way against them that persecute me: bsay unto my soul, I am thy salvation.

14 I behaved2 myself as though he had been my friend3 or brother:4 I bowed down heavily, as one that mourneth for his mother.

15 But in mine adversity they rejoiced, and gathered themselves together: yea, the babjects gathered themselves together against me, and I knew it not;6 they did tear me, and ceased not:

16 With hypocritical mockers in feasts, "they gnashed upon me with their teeth.

VIA DOLOROSA—OVER WHICH CHRIST WALKED TO THE CROSS OF CALVARY. [PSALMS, XXXV: 7.]—"For without cause have they hid for me their net in a pit, which without cause they have digged for my soul." The Via Dolorosa is known as the mournful way over which our Saviour passed from the judgment hall to Calvary. This is a gloomy street where are arched passages, and an honored stone that has been so often pressed by the lips of pious pilgrims.

It is very interesting, however, from the standpoint of the historian and the artist, for from this neighborhood the original ideas have been secured which take form in some of the most celebrated works of European art. The way begins with the palace of Pilate and ends in the church of the Holy Sepulcher. At the commencement of the Via Dolorosa there once stood the Scala Santa or staircase which was removed by Constantine to the Basilica of Saint John Lateran in Rome.

tect, what unceasing provision is made for them that fear him! Though the most ravenous beasts and covetous men should be pinched and starved, none that fear him shall ever want, either for soul or body, what is for their good. It is a great mercy when children are from their infancy carefully instructed in the word and ways of God. And negligent parents and masters will have a heavy charge to answer in the day of God, if for lack of knowledge their children and servants eterfor lack of knowledge their children and servants eter-nally perish. How strictly are holiness and happiness connected! But marvellous is God's love to his people, in dwelling with them, delighting in them, hearing their requests, and in delivering, preserving, and re-deeming them. And who can support under his in-dignation against the wicked! But let me not here forget his kindness to us in Christ, and the justice which he did and will measure to Jewish, heathen, antichristian, and other opposers.

PSALM XXXV. Ver. 1. The speaker in this psalm is one; and the interpretation must depend upon discovering who he is. Compare therefore ver. 19 with Jn. 15, 25, and the speaker is found to be Christ. And never lived there another who could say, 'They hated me without a cause.' See also ver. 7. C. Ver. 8. But if the speaker be Christ, how can he thus pray against his enemies, seeing that he teaches us to love and to pray for them? This is a question originating in great inattention to 'things that differ,' Phi. 1. 10. For (1) does not this prayer detail what God in judgment will do? And can there be any reason against praying him to do his own will? But (2) can any one neglect to pray that Satan's kingdom may be destroyed? And what is there in these words but a prayer for God's righteous judgment upon Satan's causeless enmity? C. Ver. 13. Sick. Sin is a sickness of the soul, a sickness unto death, against which no physician but the Conqueror of death can prevail. But such a physician is Jesus, Mat. 9, 12. C. Ver. 22. O Lord, be not far from me. Distant in space, God can never be; but distant in time his help frequently is. For thus the tries the faith and increases the glory of his servants, and finally magnifies his own grace and salvation. C. Ver. 24. Here is another evidence that the speaker who prays to be judged in righteoussueses is no other than Christ the righteous; for every conscious sinner must rather cry for mercy. See also ver. 27. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The best of men are often most people; while ravishing and lasting are the prosperity cruelly persecuted. But a good God to plead their cause, and a good conscience to witness their integrity, are enough to comfort them. And a time is at hand when God will sufficiently recompense all the injuries done to them. However little persecutors see it, their feet stand on a slippery place, and a dreadful pit of ruin is just before them. And though we may not wish evil to our worst enemies, yet we may safely wish confusion to the implacable enemies of Christ and his church. Base ingratitude grievously wounds a gener-ous spirit, when the greatest services meet with an ill requital. But let men use us as they will, it is our duty requital. But let men use us as they will, it is our duty to pray for them. Though our kindness may be lost upon them, and our prayers slighted by them, they shall not return without a blessing to ourselves. And if we are made the reproach of the meanest, we but fill up what is behind of the sufferings of Christ. But short-lived is the triumphing, fearful and lasting the misery, of those who are enemies to Christ and his people; while rayising and lasting run this and joys of the godly in the kind delight and favour of their God! All our comforts come from his hand, through active faith in his Son; and therefore he ought to be praised on their account.

PSALM XXXVI. Ver. 1. The form of this sentence is involved. It is dramatic, and may be explained in this way:—
The writer introduces himself as scrutinizing the character and conduct of the wicked. His heart pronounces judgment upon them; and the substance of his judgment is, that they are not influenced by the fear of God. Pleasure, passion, and worldly aggrandizement are the great mainsprings of their actions. P.

Ver. 6. Great mountains. Conspicuous from afar, elevated above the clouds, the battlements of kingdoms, the storehouses of inexhaustible wealth, the immovable monuments of almighty power. C.

of inexhaustide wearin, in: immovable monuments of annignty power. C.

Ver. 9. In thy light, &c. God dwells in light, 1 Ti. 6. 16.
God is light, 1 Jn. 1. 5. In Christ was light, Jn. 1. 9. In Christ, therefore, God's light, the believer sees light—the light of doctrine in ignorance, 2 Pe. 1. 19, and of immortality in death, 2 Ti.

REFLECTIONS.—Living in open sin is a certain mark of an unregenerate heart. And how deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked, are the hearts of men by nature! What self-flattery—what abominable thoughts and devices—what false and mischievous -what horrid deeds proceed from them! Night and day they perpetrate crimes. And none are worse than apostate professors: their deliberate wickedness shows the power of the devil uncontrolled within them! And they who, when awake on their beds, have their thoughts unoccupied in God's words, will find the devil at hand to suggest evil to them. But how high—how fixed—how unsearchable are the excellencies of God! fixed—how unsearchable are the excellencies of God! Unbounded is his mercy—unchangeable his veracity—conspicuous his justice—unsearchable his words—and awful his works! Benevolent and extensive is his providential care. Precious and engaging his love. And powerfully considerate and delightful are the provision, the comfort, the life, the light, the love, the righteousness, which he bestows upon all people. righteousness, which he bestows upon all people. But inevitable is the ruin and intolerable the everlasting misery of all who reject them.

PSALM XXXVII. Ver. 1. The preceptive parts of this psalm select an individual as the object of instruction—the Spirit speaking forth the observation and experience of an aged prophet. That the Spirit directly addresses Christ, will be evident from ver. 6, for there never was any other who had righteenmess to bring forth. See Ro. 3. 10: 1 Jn. 2. 1. And through the perfect instructions addressed to him his members learn the nature and obligations of universal holiness. C.

Ver. 23. Good man. "Good' is not in the original, and the Hebrew signifies 'a mighty man,' even the mighty Lord, the King of glory, described Ps. 24. 8, the man Christ Jesus, who with 'clean hands and a pure heart,' ascends into the 'hill of God,' and abides in the 'holy place' a Priest for ever, He. 6. 20; 7. 24–28. C.

Ver. 25. Many have stumbled at this unlimited statement, for they have seen the children of believers reduced to want. But children are not mentioned, but seed—which signifies an entire race—a stream of life from the fountain of the righteous. Now, in this sense, the true sense, all experience verifies the statement. The lazzaroni of Naples are a race of beggars; their birth, their heirship, their education, their inheritance, is begging. So are many of the hapless people called gipsies. But, during all their dispersion and calamities, the Jews have never become a seed, a race of beggars; their employments, alas! are often low and ignoble, but still they are a race of workers, and as a seed they beg not. The same important fact is ever verified in the history of true Christians. There is not, there never was, there cannot be, a seed, a race of Christian beggars. C.

Ver. 38. 'Keep in innocence, and regard uprightness: for the perfect man hath a posterity, but the rebellious shall be destroyed together; the posterity of the wicked shall be cut off' (Horstey). This amendment seems necessary, for that 'the end of the wicked shall be cut off,' is scarcely intelligible. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Even eminent saints are apt REFLECTIONS.—Even eminent saints are apt to fret at the prosperity of the wicked—and yet how little reason is there for it! Be the apparent happiness of the wicked what it will in this world, it is mingled with the poisoning curse of God: it gives no solid satisfaction while it lasts, and it is quickly at an end. And never is their ruin nearer than when their prosperity never is their ruin nearer than when their prosperity spreads and flourishes like a green bay-tree. It brings them to everlasting wrath, and hastens them rapidly to the suffering of endless woe. But godliness hath great gain, having the promise of this life and of that which is to come. If rooted and grounded in Christ, we trust and delight in the Lord, and wait on him in the foith of his promises and chediance to his laws. the faith of his promises and obedience to his laws, extensive and glorious shall be our inheritance-pleasure, support, honour, safety, plenty, protection, peace, happy death, and everlasting salvation.

PSALM XXXVIII. Ver. 1. There is not on record such another memorial of affliction as we find presented in this psalm. The wrath and arrows of the Almighty—a body racked with disease and pain—an agonized spirit, the desertion of friends—the plottings and assaults of inveterate enemies—all concentrate upon one sufferer. And who is he that can sustain the assault? Surely this can be none but the 'Man of Sorrows,' whom 'it pleased the Lord to bruise.' C.

Ver. 12. Lay snares. This was fulfilled when the Pharisees and Herodians combined to entangle him in his speech, Mat. 22. 15–22; and when, as in Jn. 8. 6, they thought to ensare him into a decision in favour of immorality, or into pronouncing a sentence of death, which they might construe into usurpation of the executive power. See also Lu. 6, 7. C.

REFIECTIONS.—How tremendous is even God's

REFLECTIONS.—How tremendous is even God's fatherly wrath! But how much more his awful judgment against the ungodly! Sin makes fearful work even in saints. But much more terrible is its effects in sinners! Yea, where real grace is, sin will be more painful and bitter than all the arrows, strokes, and wounds of trouble. And however painful the wounds and groans of the soul are, they are symp-toms of life. It is hopeful when outward distempers make men to search out and bewail their sinful causes. But nothing is a more fatal sign than insensibility. No human strength can withstand God's afflicting hand. No sinews of brass, nor bones of iron, can resist the strokes of fierce disease. And often our worldly friends, who flutter around us in our prosperity, treacherously forsake us in our adversity. But what a comfort it is forsake us in our adversity. Dut what a comfort it is that we have a compassionate God to trust to, who knows and can cure our maladies! How many, how malicious and active, are the enemies of Christ and his saints! Their enmity at God himself and his image is sames: Their enimity at God minsen and ins image is the cause of their quarrel. So fixed is their hatred at godliness, that they abhor it though benefited by it. It is hard, but wise, to imitate Jesus Christ in calm composure under severe provocation;—in silently suffering and in overlooking manifold unkindness done to us. But to take notice of malicious and elementers. But to take notice of malicious and clamorous enemies is ordinarily to make evil worse. Hope in God will sufficiently support us against every oppression and injury. They who contentedly leave their cause with him shall never be disappointed nor want an advocate to plead for them; and the more sense we have of our offences against him, the greater will be nave or our onences against mm, the greater with be our penitential grief and our patience under the provocation of men. Our blessed relation to him as our Friend, Saviour, and God, improved by the prayer of faith, will quickly bring him to our relief.

PSALM XXXIX. Ver. 1. I will take heed to my ways, that I sim not with my tongue. He who could, without vain self-confidence, make and keep this resolution, must be more than man. Man might pray to be so upheld, Christ alone could so resolve.

man. Man might pray to be so upheld, Christ aione courd so resolve. C.

Ver. 4. This is a lesson the worldly mind is most unwilling to learn, partly through fear of death, and partly through fear of losing life's vain enjoyments. Our Lord learned it in answer to prayer, leaving us here also 'an example that we should follow his steps.' C.

Ver. 12. Jesus wept at the tomb of Lazarus; over impenitent Jerusalem; and in the days of his flesh 'made supplication with strong crying and tears' of these, because they must often have been by night and in secret, the Spirit, that searcheth the deep things both of God and man, here and elsewhere in the Psalms, makes discovery and gives the record. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Great watchfulness and circumspection are necessary to our walking aright in this wicked and ensnaring world. For careless hearts will make and ensnaring world. For careless hearts will make crooked ways; and next to the heart nothing is harder to guide than the tongue: but the stronger the temptation is, the stronger ought to be our resolution against it. We are very apt to run from one extreme to another. If we restrain our lips from evil, we are ready to neglect that speech which is with grace seasoned with salt. And when our mind, long in silence, summarize more sorrows and the instrumental except.

ruminates upon sorrows and the instrumental causes of them, it galls its sores and aggravates its discontent. But there is great need to consider what death is, and how near it is; and that it is continually working in us: for vain and transient are men, with all their joys and honours, their griefs and fears, their toils and cares. And the more we see death and vanity stamped upon all things here, the more we ought to be weaned from them in our affections, and the more solicitous should we be in securing the ever-living, the substantial, and eternal Good. The more our lying refuges are swept eternal Good.

away, the more reason we have to trust in and call on God, who never disappoints any. With holy resigna-tion to his strokes, we must earnestly beg the forgive-ness of the cause and the removal of the rod. We cannot impeach the equity of his judgments, nor with-stand their force. But if they set us a weeping and praying, and render us weaned from this world, God, our friend and companion, will quickly give us relief. And by his grace he will ripen us for heaven before he give the mortal stroke.

PSALM KL. Ver. 1. I waited patiently for the Lord. It is here to be remarked, as in several other psalms, that the speaker is one; and that the Holy Spirit, speaking by Paul, He. 10, 5-9, declares this one to be Christ. But when Christ is found to be the speaker in one part, he must, if there be any confidence in the grammar of any language, be the speaker in the whole psalm. C.

Ver. 6. Mine ears hast thou opened. From Ex. 21. 6 it will appear that this expression signifies 'thou hast made me a servant for ever,' an expression perfectly equivalent to that wondrous mystery revealed 1 Co. 15, 28. Paul, He. 10. 5, quotes from the Septuagint translation, which gives an expository not a literal translation. C.

Ver. 12. Mine iniquities, &c. Instead of labouring to evade the inevitable conclusion that these words were, in the Spirit, spoken by Christ—an attempt made by supposing the psalm should end at ver. 10, or by inserting afflictions instead of initiation the believers is a kit own, and fett them, and confessed them, and died for them. See notes on Ps. 32. 5; 25; 2. C.

Ver. 15. See notes on Ps. 5. 10; 35. 8. Several high authorities endeavour to elude the apparent objection that ites against such prayers by translating them prophetically and not as imprecatory. The Greek translation, however, employed by the Spirit of truth, Ac. 1. 20, sets the point at rest in favour of the authorized version. C.

REFLECTIONS.-Alas! what fearful and lasting troubles of body and mind Jesus and his people have allotted them on earth! What patience is necessary under them! But God is their deliverer. And greatly under them! But God is their deliverer. And greatly exalting, establishing, joyous, and encouraging is their deliverance at last. Happy are those who, renouncing all other confidences, trust in God alone. Great is the number, the marvellous grace of his thoughts and acts towards Jesus Christ and his children in the work of redemption. 4 Blessedh is that man that maketh the LORD his trust, and 'respecteth not the proud, nor such as turn aside to lies.

5 Many, O Lord my God, are thy wonderful works which thou hast done, and thy thoughts which are to us-ward;3 they cannot be reckoned up in order unto thee: 'if I would declare and speak of them, they are more than can be numbered.

6 Sacrifice and offering thou didst not desire; mine ears hast thou opened:5 burntoffering and sin-offering hast thou not re-

7 Then said I, Lo, I come: in the volume of the book it is written of me,

8 I "delight to do thy will, O my God: yea, thy law is within my heart.7

9 Io have preached righteousness in the great congregation: lo, I have not refrained my lips, O Lord, thou knowest.

10 I have not hid "thy righteousness within my heart; I have declared thy faithfulness and thy salvation: I have not concealed thy lovingkindness and thy truth from the great congregation.

11 Withhold not thou thy tender mercies from me, O LORD: "let thy loving-kindness and thy truth continually preserve me.

12 For innumerable evils have compassed me about: mine iniquities have taken hold upon me, so that I am not able to look up: they are more than the hairs of mine head; therefore my heart faileth8 me.

13 Be* pleased, O Lord, to deliver me: O LORD, make haste to help me.

14 Lety them be ashamed and confounded together that seek after my soul to destroy it; elet them be driven backward, and put to shame that wish me evil.

15 Let* them be desolate for a reward of their shame that say unto me, Aha, aha!

16 Let all those that seek thee rejoice and be glad in thee: let such as love thy salvation say continually, The LORD be magnified.

17 But I am poor and needy; *yet the LORD thinketh upon me: thou gart my help and my deliverer; make no tarrying, O my God.

so in comparison of Jesus the Son of God, and his com-plete holiness of nature, obedience of life, and remedial sufferings! With great cheerfulness he sought for sunerings: With great calculations with a steady purpose of love he fulfilled his work, in executing every saving office for our good. Dreadful was every saving office for our good. Dreadful was the load of our iniquities laid upon him. But he fin-ished transgression, and made an end of sin, and publishes to men the declarations and offers of gospel-grace. Let us then embrace every promise as ratified by his blood: and in the faith of his suffering death for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him, let us cheerfully and gratefully devote ourselves, by the most solemn ties, to his service. In his name let us fight the good fight of faith and finish our course. In his name Behold how the prayers of saints, but chiefly the inter-cession of Jesus Christ, issued in the downfall of evil and the prosperity and deliverance of believers. It is infinitely dangerous to mock gracious mercy. But no griefs, no poverty, can render them miserable who fear him. There is a throne of grace to which they have the boldest access. Their God, and all that he hath or doth, is the ground of their joy. His inexhaustible fulness, adapted to their wants, the prayers of faith can unlock. The promises are sure; and the of faith can unlock. moment of fulfilment hastens forward.

PSALM XLI. Ver. r. 'This psalm, like Ps. xxxviii., which it so much resembles, is one that will be always eminently useful to those who are visited with sickness, and who, at the same time, are deprived of the sympathy in their sufferings which the afflicted so much need and desire, and who, instead of sympathy, are subjected to detraction and calumny—their enemies taking advantage of their condition to circulate unfavourable reports in regard to them, and their heretofore professed friends withdrawing from them and uniting with their calumniators and detractors.'

From man's cruelty the psalmist teaches us to turn to divine mercy. As a friend and helper God never fails. P. Ver. 4. Our Lord (Jn. 13. 18, compare with ver. 9) declares this scripture fulfilled by the treachery of Judas; our Lord is therefore the speaker. To set aside this evidence, he is said to have quoted by accommodation, a principle totally unsupported by divine authority, a principle which, if once adopted, puts an end to interpretation; for no man could determine where accommodation ends and reality begins. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Whilst here also we behold Jesus Christ through poverty. affliction malicious and treaches

Christ through poverty, affliction, malicious and treacherous enemies, entering into his glory, to the end-less honour of his Father, and the joy of his heart, let us observe, that kindness to God's poor and afflicted is as much our interest as our duty, and God's blessing is the only comfort of every estate. It can give rest in trouble, and make even grief to smile. And pleasant under trouble are penitent confessions and fervent requests founded on the promise and mercy of God. Sin

ENERAL VIEW OF THE GARDEN OF GETHSEMANE—WHERE CHRIST PRAYED THE LAST PRAYER. [Psalms, xl:7, 8.]—"Then said I, Lo, I come; in the volume of the book it is written of me, I delight to do thy will, O, my God; yea, the law is within my heart." Alphonse de Lamartine, member of the French Academy, after losing in Palestine his only daughter, Julia, wrote in the Garden of Gethsemane one of the saddest poems, part of which we quote:

"At the dry, dusty base of Olive's Mount Under the shade of Zion's ruined walls.

Dies is eight

Is quite shut out. There Cedron slowly rolls
His scanty waves between his arid banks;
There in the hillside lies Jehoshaphat entombed.
Instead of grass the barren soil bears only ruins,
And the ancient trees cleave with their straggling roots the stony tombs.
There between two high rocks is dimly seen
The lonely grot to which the Man of Grief Went to experience death before it came."

PSALM XLIII¹

1 The pealmist, praying to be restored to the temple, promiseth to serve God joyfully. 5 He encourageth his soul to trust in God.

UDGE2 me, O God, and plead my cause against an ungodly's nation: O deliver me from the deceitful and unjust man.4

2 For thou art bthe God of my strength: why dost thou cast me off? why go I mourning because of the oppression of the enemy?

3 O send out thy dight and thy truth: let them lead me; let them bring me unto thy holy hill, and to thy tabernacles.

4 Theng will I go unto the altar of God, unto God my exceeding joy: yea, hupon the harp will I praise thee, O God, my God.

5 Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and fills men's hearts and tongues with enmity against Christ and his people: yet vile are their efforts and as vain their hopes. But happy trials are those which excite our prayers, animate our faith, increase our dependence on God, and tune our hearts to his praise; and which make JEHOVAH's love to our souls more evident and precious.

PSALM XLII. Ver. 6. The general idea is—'Wherever, to whatever region I am led or driven in thy providence, I will remember and praise thee.' The psalmist was probably in exile when the psalm was phened. If David wrote it, as is probable, then the general scope would seem to indicate that he had sought a refuge from his enemies somewhere in the northern valley of the Jordan. We know he fled thither on the rebellion of Absalom, and this psalm may refer to that period. P.—Jordan. The word signifies 'the river of judgment.' There John baptized, Mat. 3. 6; there was our Lord himself baptized, ver. 3; and there did the Spirit descend upon him visibly, ver. 16; and there did the Father from heaven acknowledge him for his beloved, that is, the true David his son, ver. 17. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Nothing but God himself can satisfy believing souls. If the sense of his love be withdrawn, every enjoyment is tasteless. No cisterns of earthly comforts can quench their thirst, their earnest desire for the LIVING FOUNTAIN. Constrained absence from for the LIVING FOUNTAIN. Constrained absence from the public means of fellowship with God is a heavy and tormenting burden to a faithful soul, and quickens his longings after them. No wonder then that he groans earnestly to be clothed upon with his house which is from heaven. O what terrible afflictions and sorrows are in the lot of God's favourite samts! When outward distress lies heavy, inward temptations are often violent. And the joys which we have tasted in God make the withdrawment of his presence and own dejections under trouble, by poring on our corruptions or distress, and forgetting the promises, grace, and faithfulness of our Redeemer. We had need therefore to call our souls to account for their conduct. And if we cannot get relief by pleading with our burdened spirits, we should commit our case to our gracious God. And the more furious and manifold the storms of trouble are, the more earnest ought to be our believing applications to and dependence on God. Let providence cast us where it will, our God and our prayers should still attend us. Our faith may be enfeebled and sore shaken, but should never fail. Re membrance of what God is to us, and hath done for us, should suppress our unbelieving fears. If by faith we accept salvation, neither earth nor hell can hinder us from the benefit of it. In our darkest nights comforts the more grievous. But we often cause our of trouble, desertion, and temptation, we have always much mercy to thank God for. much mercy to thank God for. Whatever repeated encouragement our feeble minds may need, if God be our God, our life, and the health of our countenance. neither earth, nor death, nor hell is able to hurt us.

PSALM XLIII. Ver. 1. The meaning is, not that the writer desired the Lord to try and judge him as a culprit; but rather to interfere in his behalf—to save him from the unjust accusations of the wicked. The psalmist was conscious that he was guiltless in regard to the charges brought against him, and therefore he made his appeal from unjust men to a just and righteous God. He does not represent himself as absolutely pure, or perfectly holy before God; but simply as innocent of the crimes laid against him by men. P.

against him by men. P.

Ver. 2. Why dost thou cast me off? This expostulation was exemplified in the crucifixion, Mat. 27, 46, when our Lord cried with a loud voice, as if it were a special thing that all should hear, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" C.

REFLECTIONS.—When men wrong us and God deserts us, our only refuge is still in God himself. He may frown, but he cannot cease to love his people, however hard they find it to believe so amidst deep convictions and raging lusts. It may be for a time difficult to reconcile God's providences with his promises; but with a little patience the mystery will be unveiled. Such as love Christ's appearance shall have their cause judged far sooner than their enemies wish, and far better than themselves conceive. Next to God himself, the saints love nothing more dearly than the ordinances of his grace. But none can approach ordinances aright unless they exercise faith in their hearts; and it is for his sake the saints delight to be there.

Men never attend ordinances aright but when they have fellowship with Christ as their altar, their atone-ment, their food, their God, their joy. Intimate fel-lowship with God cannot but tune our hearts and tongues to his praise. And the more we deal with God by faith, we shall see the more sin and evil in inward despondency.

PSALM XLIV. Ver. 1. The grammar here presents a plurality of speakers, and their statements and complaints indicate a faithful but a persecuted church, ver. 11, 17-22. Occasionally (ver. 4, 6, 15) a single speaker interferes, who, it appears from ver. 15, can be no other than Christ; for no man who knows the versatility of frail human nature can imagine any but Christ truly to utter that verse. C.

Ver. 3. Infidels have frequently objected against Jehovah for expelling the nations of Canaan. There are two answers—x. God has a sovereign right over his own world. 2. The Canaanites were righteously expelled on account of their wickedness, Le. 19, 23, 24. C.

Yer, 9. The true followers of Jesus are all soldiers of the cross, and must follow the Lamb, and like him be often put to shame, and like him despise it for the joy set before them, 1 Ti. 6, 12; 2

Ti. 2, 3, 4, 4, 7; He. 12, 2. C.

Ver. 12. This has often in times of persecution been literally fulfilled, when the mere sentence of the judge, deciding that the accused, under some opprobrious name, was a true Christian, was sufficient to deliver him over as a slave to the galleys, or transport him to distant penal colonies. C.

Ver. 15. This is true only of the Son of God, and there is an awful sense in which it is ever true, seeing there are those in the professing church who ever 'crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame, 'He. 6, 6, C.

Ver. 19. The place of dragons. The persecution of the church the Spirit of God attributes to the malice of Satan under the emblem of a dragon, Re. 12, 3-9; and the scenes of persecution may well be termed the 'place of dragons,' where his servants rule, Ep. 6.12, C.

REFLECTIONS.—Memorials of past mercies ought to be carefully recorded and transmitted from age to age, as an encouragement in time of need as well as a ground of thankfulness. It is never outward force, but Jesus Christ's Word and Spirit, that build up he church and triumph over the powers of darkness. If we want help in trouble, we must renounce all other confidences, and take God alone to be our kind deliverer and boast; so shall our troubles and griefs be quickly turned into everlasting praise.—It is common, but sinful, for them whom God casts down to think themselves utterly cast off, and to shrink under reproach and suffering, as if they were not our appointed cross. For it is not now but hereafter that God will make us to know and admire the mystery of his providence. is especially distressing to the faithful when they falsely is especially distressing to the faithful when they falsely apprehend that God gets no glory by the afflictions of his people; nay, instead thereof, is dishonoured and reproached.—All God's people, though not called to be proper martyrs, have their particular sufferings allotted to them for his sake. But it is dangerous to comply with sins in order to shun troubles. Highly provoking to God are treachery, apostasy, and idolatry; and fearfully he will search out and punish them. But great is the mercy that nothing can break his promise of grace with the faithful; and that not sins of mere infirmity, but indulged provocations, are held as mere infirmity, but indulged provocations, are held as a violation of their round of duties. And if he appear PSALM XLV. Ver. 1. It was the general opinion of the ancient Jewish rabbins and commentators that this beautiful psalm had direct if not exclusive reference to the Messiah. Its general scope, and some of its more remarkable expressions, prove this. There are passages in it such as cannot, by any fair canon of interpretation, be applied to any man, however pure in character or exalted in rank. Besides Paul, in the epistle to the Hebrews, distinctly applies it to our Lord, ch. 1. 8, 9. When thus interpreted it is clear, consistent, and noble. P.—The King is Messiah, 'God manifest in the flesh,' exalted to glory; and the words given by the Spirit to the prophet are the words of the Father to his beloved Son. See He. 1. 1, 5, 6, 8-13. C.

are the words of the Father to his delived some 6, 8-13. C.

Ver. 9. The queen, not the church universal as 'the bride, the Lamb's wife,' for then could that queen have no 'companions,' Re. 21. 9. Is not this queen rather the primitive Christian church, gathered to the Son of God, Ja. 1. 18; Re. 14. 4, and of which all subsequent ages produce but descendants or companions? C.

Ver. 12. Tyre is particularized as the emblem of all mercantile nations.—Note, In the merciful and overruling providence of God the mercantile has been made the great agent of the missionary enterprise; and the desire of acquiring the wealth of this world has led to the diffusion of the unsearchable riches of Christ. C.

world has led to the diffusion of the unsearchable riches of Christ. C.

Ver. 16. These words apply not to the bride but to the Bride-groom—the Messiah. The first clause signifies that great though his glory might be as the descendant (after the flesh) of a long line of kings, it would be far surpassed by the glory of his posterity—his spiritual seed. Their name would be more illustrious, their acts would be more noble, and their dominion would be wider and more enduring. How true is this of King Jesus! P.—Fathers. Instead of prophets and apostles, whom I will successively remove from thy head (see 2 Ki. 2, 3; Ro. 9, 5; t Co. 4. 15; Re. 21. 14), shall be thine own spiritual children, converted to God by means of thy faithful testimony. C.

REFIECTIONS.—Discoveries of Jesus' glory power-

REFLECTIONS.-Discoveries of Jesus' glory powerfully animate our hearts and tune our tongues to commend him. How glorious is his person as God-man! Rich in grace are the qualities of his heart and words of his mouth. In him it pleased the Father that all fulness of blessings for men should dwell. almighty power, by his word and influences of his Spirit, he persuaded multitudes in the apostolic age to the obedience of faith: and by the strokes of his justice did and shall destroy his Jewish or other implacable opposers. Having by himself purged our sins, he, as our righteous Saviour, sat down at the right hand of God, as the reward of his righteous service; and is, in the most transcendent manner, filled with the Holy Ghost to shed on us abundantly. In a most glorious and heart-engaging manner his manhood, mediatorial offices, and righteousness appear in the heavens above and in his church and ordinances below. And his people, adorned with gifts and graces, are raised up together, and made to sit together with him. Faithful men, both Jews and Gentiles, in the day of his power, are persuaded to accept the gospel, to renounce all others, and devote themselves entirely to him and his service, as the objects of his gracious and everlasting delight. In shining robes of righteousness, grace, and holy conversation, each in their order ness, grace, and noty conversation, each in their order are adorned; and after serving their generation by the will of God, they shall be brought and admitted into his heavenly palace with exceeding joy. Instead of Jewish fathers shall there be Gentile converts; and instead of glorified saints shall there be another generation, begotten by the power of his grace, all made kings and priests unto God! Thus by the spread and influ-ence of the gospel shall Jesus' renown and honour be perpetuated on earth, while those in heaven above shall praise him for ever and ever.

PSALM XLVI. Ver. I. This has been called Luther's psalm. 'It was that he was accustomed to sing in trouble. When the times were dark—when the enemies of truth appeared to triumph—when disaster seemed to come over the cause in which he was engaged, and the friends of the Reformation were dispirited and sad—he was accustomed to say to his fellow-labourers, Come, let us sing the 46th psalm.' No other passage in the whole Word of God is more adapted for rousing the drooning faith of the church. The thoughts are noble and the words sublime. God omnipotent—God ever present—God infinite in mercy—God the king, defender, and sustainer of his church, is the grand theme of the psalmist. P.—God is our refuge. The assembled church here exemplifies the fulfilment of the gracious promise of the foregoing psalm, ver. 17, the highest praise being that which is due for deliverance from trouble and strength for duty. C.

Ver. 4. 'The holy place of the tabernacles of the Most High is a stream, the branches whereof gladden the city of God' (Mudge). The stream is the truth in Jesus; the branches, reading, heaving, holy converse, prayer, exhoration, reproof, correction, instruction in righteousness, turnishing the man of God te all good works. C.

REFLECTIONS. — When dangers appear or extents

REFLECTIONS.—When dangers appear greatest our faith in God's promise and perfections should be strongest. If we can triumph in God as our own God we may triumph over every trouble and danger. revolutions on earth can little affect them whose hearts are duly fixed on things above. They need never fear, and they can never fail, who take God for their refuge and their strength. Notwithstanding all her enemies, his church shall in him obtain joy, establishment, and deliverance. If by his word, his Spirit, and his blood, we enjoy communications of grace and comfort, we are amply repaid for all the storms that can be raised by the world that lief thin wickedness. But in what a tremendous and awful manner he from age to age revenges the injuries done to his church, the ruin of the nations around Canaan, and of the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Persians, Syro-Grecians, Romans, Anti-christians, Mahometans, and others, have or shall manifest. And it is highly proper to contemplate his infinite perfections, displayed in all his conquests of judgment or grace; that in every age, in every case, we may have faith in him as our Protector, Deliverer, and Strength.

PSALM XLVII. Ver. 1. This noble song of praise and joy was probably composed at the dedication of the temple and was

RENA OF AMPHITHEATRE, PUTEOLI—NEAR WHERE ST. PAUL LANDED IN ITALY. [PSALMS, xlvii:8.]—"God reigneth over the heathen: God sitteth upon the throne of his holiness." We learn from history that wicked men are no less under law than righteous men. The laws of God which wicked men violate destroy them. while the righteous are preserved by observing them. This arena of the amphitheater at Putcoli is a very good illustration of the wreck and ruin which have come to the fame and the fortunes of the men who built it, and found, as Nero did, upon its arena, a scene for wild and unbridled actions. Putcoli is rich in historic associatious. Scipio sailed from this place to Spain. Cicero had a villa here, and here Nero planned the murder of his mother. This was the famous watering place of the rich and luxurious Romans intended to be sung during the solemn service. It is in every way adapted for such an event. P.—O clap your hands. There are feelings and sentiments which words cannot express, and then the aid of action is commanded, and specially the hands as the organs and emblems of all activity. See 2 Ki. 11. 12. C. Ver. 3. He shall subdue, &c. Not by any earthly, but by a spiritual conquest; for the 'weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty (nevertheless) to the pulling down of strongholds,' 2 Co. 10. 4. C.

but mighty (nevertheless) to the pulling down of strongholds, 2 Co. to 4. C. This psalm when written was a prophecy, but is now a record of the ascension of Christ, Ep. 4. 8, and of that joy with which the heavenly powers hailed his triumph over in and death. C. Yer. 9. The princes of the people are gathered together, even the people of the God of Abraham. This verse carries us beyond the ascension, to a period when Jew and Gentile shall be 'both one in Christ'—not merely in principle, as they are now, but in fact, according to the sure word of prophecy. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Behold, my soul, our exalted Lord Jesus, terrible to his enemies because of their reection of him; but kind to believers in blessing them throughout all the world in himself-in choosing for them, when having faith, their portion in the new-covenant and in the heavenly state! Behold how, amidst surrounding troops of hymning angels, he ascended on high; had all power in heaven and earth given him: and by his gospel, word, and gracious in-fluence, he gathers the nations to himself, that they may be blessed together with faithful Abraham; and even makes the rulers of nations submit to his yoke or helpful to his cause!

PSALM XLVIII. Ver. 6. That these words are not a historic reference or narrative, but a historic prophecy, will be evident from considering that they introduce to faith the perpetual establishment of Zion, ver. 8, whereas it yet presents to sense nothing but the feature of 'perpetual desolations.' C. Ver. 8. In the city of our God: God will establish it for vier. How can this be reconciled with the destruction of all things foretold, 2 Pe. 3, 7? Most easily: God will establish Zion for ever in the person of her King, in the happiness of her subjects, in the fulfilment of her prophecies, the realization of her types, the demonstration of her faith, the beauty of her holiness, and the brightness of her glory. C.

Ver. 11. The daughters of Judah: Not the inferior cities, but literally, the daughters of Judah: as Miriam and her attendants rejoiced at passing the Red Sea, Ex. 15, 20, 21; or the women out of all the cities of Israel, to hail and celebrate the victory of David over Goliath, 1 Sa. 18, 6, 7. C.

REFIECTIONS—Creat and greatly to be praised.

REFLECTIONS.—Great, and greatly to be praised, is our exalted Redeemer. Glorious is his gospel-church in which his presence dwells. And in a marvellous manner hath he, in instances unnumbered, been known for her refuge. When ravaging invaders and furious persecutors have concurred in attempts to destroy her, their plots and fury have often issued in their own ruin, and his people's triumph and praise of his kindness. Quickly shall her remaining enemies be undone; and no gates of hell have, or ever shall, prevail against her. Her bulwarks, palaces of ordinances, and officers, are built on Jesus the Rock of ages, and are protected by his arm of omnipotence. Let us then declare his wondrous works and our relation to him to posterity, as an honour to him, and an encouragement to them to come and cleave to him and triumph in his the darkest days of sorrow and suffering God will save him. The word translated 'heels,' means also the impression of the heel, the footprint. Then it came to mean 'a lier in wait,' or one who watches for an advantage. This is its meaning here; and the sense of the clause therefore is: 'When I am exposed to the craft and cunning of those who lie in wait for me, what have I in reality to fear? God is on my side.' P.——Iteels. This word is translated by high authorities supplanters, that is, false Christs, seeking to supplant me in me—of the world supplanting me in the hearts, and of world yrulers supplanting me in my authority over the kingdoms of this world. But does it not rather signify the iniquity of his followers—of Judas who betrayed him, of the disciples who forsook him, and of the whole host of believers whose accumulated iniquities he bore in his body on the tree? C. Ver. 10. Wise men die. And if even the wise man cannot rescue himself from temporal death, how can any save nimself or his brother from death spiritual and eternal? C. Ver. 12. That is, when he so far forgets himself as altog-ther to neglect salvation, or trusts to his own power to avoid death, or his own men't to meet the judgment. C.

Ver. 13. The traditionary or written sayings of men are often called immortal, though their authors be dead; and works the least godly are, alas! often the most popular. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Alas! how the hearts of men cleave to earthly enjoyments! The poor need as much to he warned against envy and discontentment as the rich against pride and carnal confidence. And the truths of God ought to be inculcated with the greatest ceriousness both by word and by example. Neve seriousness, both by word and by example. Never ought saints (no, not when they suffer the charges and chastisements of their sins of conversation) to abandon themselves to unbelieving fears and doubts of God's all-sufficiency and love.—The day of death is a trying time with respect to true harding. PSALM XLIX. Ver. 1. Four things prove the prophetic speaker to be Christ. (1) The confident spirit, and universality of the call, as of one entitled to audience, ver. 1. (2) The theme of wisdom so confidently announced, ver. 2. (3) The direct quotation of ver. 4 by Mat. 13. 35, as fulfilled in the parables of our Lord. (4) The confident trust of the speaker in a glorious resurrection and acceptance with God, ver. 15. C.

Ver. 5. The leading idea of the psalm is embodied in this verse. Confident in the power and mercy of God the writer lays aside all fear. Evil days may come; life may not all be sunshine; but in 1017

ZION GATE—ON MT. ZION, WHERE DAVID LIVED. [Psalms, xlviii:2]—
"Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is Mount Zion, on the sides of the north, the city of the great King." The Zion Gate is called in Arabic, "The Gate of the Prophet David." It is on the summit of the ridge of Zion between the Armenian convent and the tomb of David. The Zion Gate opens into several footpaths which lead down to the valley of Hinnom. We pass through this gate to go to the tomb of David in the possession of the Mohammedans. A little further north, near the wall, is the Armenian church with the house of Caiaphas, and between the two is the place the monks point out as the spot where the cock crowed and where Peter wept after denying his Master. The Armenian church is almost due southwest of Zion Gate.

3 Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence: a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him.

6 Andk the heavens shall declare his righteousness: 'for God is judge himself. Selah.'

how unavailable to ransom the soul, perpetuate the life, or preserve from hell! To judge of things aright we must weigh time with eternity. It is neither wealth nor poverty, but Jesus Christ's righteousness and grace, that can render us respected of God, or really happy, in time or eternity. It is redemption through his blood that gives hope in death. It is not their own vaunts, or the world's admiration, but the word of God, that adjusts men's real character. It is not what we have here, but what we can carry into the other world, that constitutes the true riches. They are only wise who consider their latter end. Nay, in death, the state of the most loathsome animal is infinitely preferable to that of the unregenerate sinner.

PSALM L. Ver. 3. A fire. A fire of the Spirit to baptize his children, Mat. 3. 11; a fire of judgment to consume the imperfections of his people, 12 Co. 3. 15, and the strongholds of his enemies, He. 12. 29. C.

Ver. 6. The heavens shall declare his righteousness. The heavens, into which Christ has entered, as a 'Lamb without spot,' will declare by the fact of his admission and appearance, and glory there, the perfect righteousness, in virtue of which he ascended to glory, and sits upon the throne. PSALM LII.

1 David, reproving the spiteful malice of Doeg, prophesieth his destruction. 6 The righteous shall rejoice at it. 8 David, in confidence of God's mercy, giveth him thanks.

To the chief musician, Maschil, A psalm of David, when Doeg the Edomite beams and told Saul, and said unto him, David is come to the house of Ahimelech.

REFLECTIONS.—Great is the majesty, extensive the high domain, and terrible the wrath of God! And great is his care of those who have accepted through faith Jesus Christ and have walked in him as they received him. But God hath full power to change the positive institutions of his own worship at his pleasure, and to reject his long professed people for their contempt of his Son. No obedience is acceptable to him but what proceeds from the faith of his being our own God in Christ. To obey was always better than sacrifice; and prayer to and praise of God more than burnt-offerings. And since Jesus' death, and Jerusalem's destruction, Jewish ceremonies are not only vain but hurtful. But never is our gracious God more ready to hear our supplications than in a day of trouble: and what grateful vows and thanksgivings doth he then deserve at our hands! Notwithstanding antecedent gospel declarations, how rarely doth the Son of man, when he cometh, either in remarkable mercy or judgment, find faith in the earth, or indeed And great is his care of those who have accepted mercy or judgment, find faith in the earth, or indeed aught but empty formalities and gross wickedness. And none are worse than profane clergymen, stained with hypocrisy, covetousness, whoredom, slander of thing horrid. But graciously he warms ere he strikes. And to bow before the sceptre of his grace, receive his gospel offers, and practise holiness in his fear, is the way to escape the rod of his judgments and to share his eternal favours. his eternal favours.

PSALM I.I. Ver. 1. According unto the multitude of thy tender mercies blot out my transgressions. The Hebrew title attributes this psalm to David pententially bowing to the rebuke of Nathan, 2 Sa. xi. &c. Horsley, however, justly observes that this title cannot be correct, as ver. 4 describes the sin of the speaker as solely against God, whereas that of David was also against both Uriah and Bath-sheba. Who then is the speaker? The answer lies (i) In comparing Ps. 40. 6 with He. 16. 6, and these with Ps. 51. 16. (2) From considering that, though Christ is certainly the speaker in Ps. xl., he nevertheless confesses the oppression of the 'inquities lad upon him,' and i i that just sense calls them his own, in correspondence with Ps. 25. 11: 32. 5. (3) That none but Christ c. -[d truly utter the perpetual view of sin described (ver. 3). 'My sin is ever before me —even the sin of his people which he bore, the definement of which he ever saw, and the pressure of which he ever felt. C. Ver. 5. The iniquity and sin belonged, by ordinary descent, to the mother; but the 'body prepared' for Christ by the power of the Holy Ghoss, Mat. 1. 20, was itself holy, and his spirit filled with truth and wisdom, and his life with righteousness, He. 1020

Ver. 7. Hyssop was employed in sprinkling the blood of the sacrifice in the ceremonial cleansing of the keper, Le. 14. 4-6. Christ, by his own blood, 2 Jn. 1. 7, cleansed away our sins, which he bore in his own body on the tree, 1 Pe. 2. 24. C.

Ver. 13. Though Christ was always a teacher of righteousness, it was not until the joy of salvation, ver. 12, had been restored after his resurrection from the dead, that his full qualifications as a Saviour were developed in the conversion of sinners. See Ac. 2. 41.

Ver. 14. Deliver me from blood-guiltiness. Not from the sin of murder committed, but from any guilt that would arise from neglecting to 'declare all the counsel of God' to sinners. See Ac. 18. 6; so. 26. C.

REFLECTIONS. REFLECTIONS.—Into what grievous iniquities the best of men, if left to themselves, quickly fall!—but never into any from which their gracious God may not recover them. Such as sin publicly ought to take to themselves public shame, for the honour of their God and for a warning to others. Sin is a heavy burden to a penitent soul. It forces from his heart importunate cries for pardoning and purging mercy. lies in its opposition to God's nature and law. And true penitents justify God in all his judgments, however heavy upon them. No person was ever really humbled heavy upon them. No person was ever really humbled for sin till brought to see the inward and natural corruption of his heart. It is not outward forms, but inward reality of grace, that God primarily requires; and it is he alone that offers it to us. He alone must forgive our sins, purging our conscience by the blood of his Son. He alone must sanctify and renew our hearts pour out his Spirit, restore our joys, and grant of his Son. He alone must sanctify and renew our hearts, pour out his Spirit, restore our joys, and grant us his comfortable presence. What anguish and breaking of soul, loads of guilt, and of sorrow for it, can produce! But God who gives the pardon must also give the comfort of it. Renewed souls count the service of God the most perfect freedom: and the experience of God's remarkable kindness really animates to zeal for his glory, the instruction of others, and the to zeal for his glory, the instruction of others, and the welfare of his church. Broken-hearted penitents, viewing themselves as Achans in the camp, are the most earnest wrestlers with God for the happiness of the church. And all the returns of service and praise to God therein must be founded on his special favours received or must be founded on his special favours, received or secured in Christ and his blood.

PSALM LII. Ver. 1. The occasion on which this psalm was written is stated in the title; and the affecting narrative may be seen in 1 Sa. xxi. The psalm is divided into three parts. In the first (yer. 1-4), the character of the writer's enemy and calumniator is briefly but graphically depicted. In the second (yer. 5-7), the terrible punishment in store for him is described. In the third, the psalmist shows his own security and trust in God. P.—Mighty man. An appeal to man, who, when exalted to has become a proverb. REFLECTIONS. - Hardened indeed is the sinner who abuses the goodness of God to glory in his wickedwho abuses the goodness of God to grory in his wicked-ness. Malice, lying, and craft are the abhorrence of God and the image of the devil; and quickly shall they render men miserable in life and lost in hell. Quickly shall those who trust in wealth or wickedness remove into everlasting woe. And the striking judgments of God on the wicked ought to be carefully obments of God on the wicked ought to be carefully observed and improved as warnings, while we thank him for sending us his Son so that he is the means of our deliverance. God marvellously founds the prosperity and promised honours of his people on their active faith. And what he has promised we must patiently walt for. None that trust in his mercy shall be disappointed but ever flourish in grace and triumble he disappoi be disappointed, but ever flourish in grace and triumph in praise.

PSALM LIII. Ver. 4. My people was the specific title given to Israel in Egypt, Ex. 3. 7; 5. x, and he who so names them here can be no other than Christ, 'the Lord that bought them,' the Angel of the covenant 'who redeemed them.' C. Ver. 5. There—that is, where the enemy had cruelly attempted to devour God's people.—Who were in 'great fear?' The people of God; and while they trembled, 'no fear was,' for God immediately 'scattered the bones' of all their assailants. C.

REFLECTIONS.—What a fountain of atheism is in REFLECTIONS.—What a journain or ameism is in our hearts! What folly—what filth—what evil—is in every sin? and yet what unnumbered acts and fearful fruits of it everywhere abound in the world! But fear and shame shall at last overwhelm the sinners, parlear and sname snam at last overwhelm the sinners, par-ticularly those who ate up, persecuted, and oppressed the people of God. Even the marvellous salvation of men through Christ shall contribute to the everlasting undoing of obstinate sinners. We are taught in the Scriptures that Christ is a Saviour of life or a Saviour of death.

PSALM LIV. Ver. 1. Tudge me. As no sinner would dare to pray for judgment, and as the humble penitent ever cries for mercy, he that utters this petition can be no other than 'the holy One of God,' prophetically described in the days of his flesh. C. Ver. 5. 'In thy truth,' i.e. in thy regard for what is just and right. Inflict upon them the punishment which their crimes deserve. There is no sinful enmity or hatred here; there are no vengeful feelings on the part of the psalmist. Justice is what he demands: and he demands it on the grounds of public weal and individual safety. P. Ver. 7. A prophetic vision of that blessed period when 'all trouble shall cease in the body of Christ the church, Ep. 1. 22, and the 'last enemy' shall be destroyed, which is death, 2 Co. REFLECTIONS.

REFLECTIONS.—The prayer of faith is a sovereign remedy in every distress: and all salvation is of God, who never fails those that seek him. Nearest neighbours and relations are often the saints' bitterest there is no wickedness too great for them. But if he be our helper he will soon raise us up friends and rid us of our enemies, according to his promise. The soul may rejoice that has the security of God's infallible promise. And past experience is the ground of cordial thanksgiving, and the earnest of continual support and future deliverance.

By some internal sentiment, necessarily confined to an individual character. For the first point, see Ps. 69, 57. Ac. 1. co, then compare Ps. 55, 12-15, 26, 21: and as Christ speaks in Ps. lxix., he also speaks in its perfect parallel, Ps. lv. The second point directs us to ver. 16-18, 22, where the positive character of the speaker's faith demonstrates that speaker to be Christ; see also ver. 4, 5, where the agony can characterize none but our Lord in Gethsemanc, Lu. 22, 44. C.

Ver. 15. Let death seize upon them, &c. This judgment was exemplified in the case of Korah and his company, Nu. 16, 30, 33: and will be still more awfully inflicted in the destructive judgment of the mystical Babylon, Rc. 18. 8. C.

Ver. 22. Cas: All; burden. The Father here addresses his beloved Son Jesus, when he 'bore our griefs and carried our sorrows,' and through him he addresses every believer, saying, "Cast your care upon him (the Lord), for he careth for you," "Cast your care upon mine time 2009,"

Ver. 23. Turbulent combinations of bloody and deceitful men will not be judicially permitted to live half the days to which, as peaceful individuals, they would naturally have attained. C.

REFLECTIONS.-While here, as in a glass, we behold Jesus, hated, reproached, betrayed, and murdered at Jerusaiem, and the judgment of God overtaking his persecutors in the destruction and dispersion of the Jewish nation, let us observe that the best of men are ordinarily most exposed to the hatred and reproach of a carnal world: and good men may, in great trials, find their fears strong and their faith shaken; but it is a great mercy that they have Jesus' bosom and the state of glory above to flee to when they can get no peace nor rest in this world. The city, the church of God, may soon be fearfully corrupted by the influence of wicked rulers. And none are more apt to promote the corruption or betray the saints than apostate or empty professors. There has always been a sad mixture of such in the church. Carnal policy and selfish ends may carry men far and long in a religious profession, even where there is no sincerity of heart. Earnest prayers of faith are effectual to bring salvation from God. How shameful then is it that they are so little used; and that the stated meals for our bodies are more frequent than those for our souls! It is God's being on our side that raises us above fear from our adversaries. Too often want of trouble hardens men in bold impiety. But impenitence and perdition are inseparimplety. But impentioned and perfution are inseparably linked together. Falsehood and perfuty will quickly find a holy God. But happy, happy for ever, are they who trust in the Lord, and by the prayers of faith cast all their burdens, troubles, works, and cares upon God, as their God and Father in Christ!

PSALM LVI. Ver. 8. David wandered over nearly the whole of southern Palestine when Saul was pursuing him. In no spot was he safe, save amid the strongholds of the mountains. There is allusion in the mention of the bottle for tears, to the very ancient custom of preserving tears in little glass vessels, called lachrymatories. The last clause is somewhat obscure. The meaning would seem to be that all the afflictions and sorrows which visited him were well known to God. P.—A map of the recorded 'wanderings,' or journeying of our Lord, is one of the most impressive sights for the human eye. Of his 'tears,' we know that twice he publicly wept, Lu. 19, 41; In. 11. 35; and that they flowed more frequently than recorded, Paul clearly declares. But his wanderings give us rest; his tears secured our joy. C. Ver. 10. See note on ver. 4. In God.—that is, in God. as revealed by his name or attribute of power to Abraham, Ge. 17. 17; and in Yehowah, as revealed to Moses by his name or attribute of uncaused and eternal existence, Ex. 3. 14. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How inveterate is the enmity of the wicked against Jesus Christ and his recorded.

the wicked against Jesus Christ and his people! unanimity, cruelty, malice, restlessness, and craft, they exert themselves to destroy them, while they spy out their ways, wrest their words, and wait for their halting. But blessed are those trials which drive us nearer to God. Strong faith is necessary when troubles and dangers are very great. But the unchangeable promise of God, yea and amen in Christ, is not only sufficient ground of trust but of cordial praise. No enemies that we can have are too great for God to humble, or too secure, strong, or daring to withstand his blow. They who have him for their friend need not fear the impotent threats or strokes of human worms.

PSALM LIX.

1 David, in great danger, prayeth to be saved from his enemies. 6 He complaineth of their cruelty. 8 He trusteth in God. 11 He prayeth against them. 16 He promiseth to praise God continually.

To the chief musician, Al-Taschith, Michtam¹ of David; "when Saul sent, and they watched the house to kill him.

DELIVER meb from mine enemies, O my God: defend me² from them that rise up against me.

2 Deliver me from the workers of iniquity, and save me from bloody men.

3 For, lo, they lie in wait for my soul: the mighty are gathered against me; not for my transgression, nor for my sin, O LORD.

Saints may, nay must, weep in prayer for a time; but | laid for others. With what fixed thought, wonder, God regards every word, every tear; and will soon make them issue in praise to the weepers and in lasting ruin to their enemies. It is reasonable then that vows made, as well as mercies received, should animate us to trust in, pray to, serve and praise him, while we live in the enjoyment of the light of his countenance.

PSALM LVII. Ver. 2. This psalm being quoted, Ro. 15. 9, forms a key for opening the true meaning of many parallel psalms. The complainant is there found to be Christ, offering prayers and supplications with strong crying and ears unto him that was able to save him from death, He. 5. 7. C.

Ver. 3 Messiah was reproached with meanness of rank, want of literature, base companionship, madness, leaguing with devils, sedition, blasphemy; and finally with the death of a malefactor—the cross. From all he was saved, by 'the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven,' 1 Pe. 1. 12, and raising him from the dead, Ro. 1.4. C. Ver. 10. Unto the clouds—which, though apparently the most variable of all things, yet constantly testify by the rainbow the truth of the divine covenant, Ge. 9. 11–17. C.

REFLECTIONS. — While saints continue on earth

REFLECTIONS. - While saints continue on earth they will still need prayer from their heart and mercy from their God. For into what devouring beasts, and deceitful devils, hath sin transformed their enemies! Heart, lips, and hands appear all animated by infernal malice and craft. But they have a God of salvation, a new relation in Jesus' blood, to secure their safety from all their enemies. And often, because of blindacss, these enemies perish in the snares which they had desire, and delight, with what ardour of inward powers, ought we then to praise and glorify God for the mercy that made and fulfils, and the faithfulness which establishes, every gracious promise! And with great fervour ought we to desire our Almighty Lord to glorify himself in heaven above and in all the earth below.

PSALM LVIII. Ver. z. That Ps. xxxv. is a psalm of Christ, is obvious from comparing ver. 19 with Jn. 15. 25; and its parallelism with Ps. Ivili, conducts to the conclusion that the congregation (ver. 1) is an appeal against the Sanhedrim who pronounced sentence against our Lord. C.

Ver. 4. Deaf adder. The deafness here attributed to the adder, is not deafness to sound, but to charming; so the ear of our Lord's judges was not deaf to evidence, but to just conclusions.—Note, The many statements made by travellers concerning serpent-charming in the East, seem to be nothing more than the evidences of inattention and credulity of false pretensions, and successful juggling: nor do they receive any countenance; but, on the contrary, a flat contradiction, from the statement of the psalmist. C.

Ver. 6. Break their teeth, O God. For explanation and vindication of this and similar prayers in relation to the enemies of our Lord, see note on Ps. 5. 10; 35. 8C.

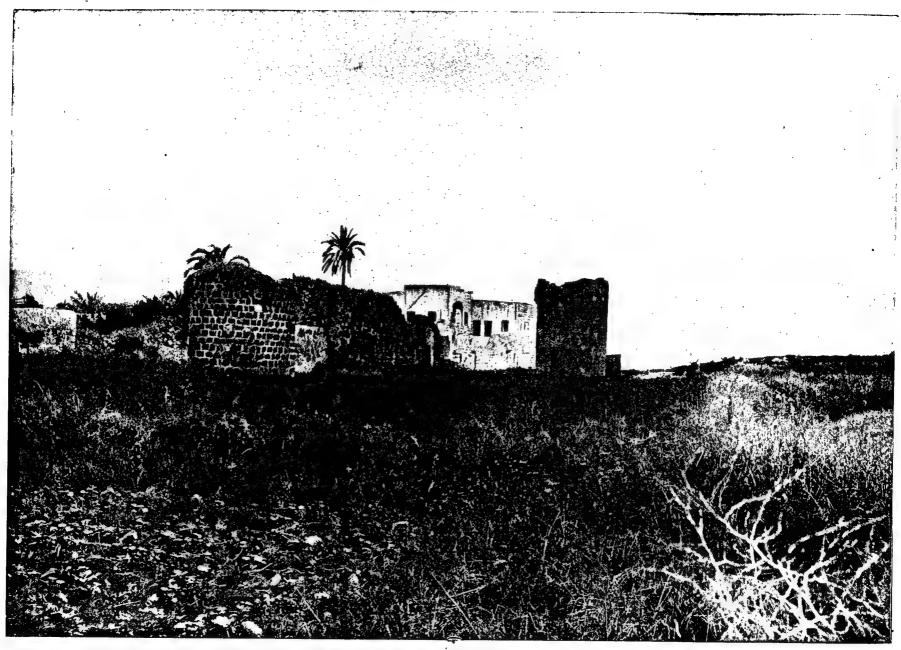

Ver. 9. Before your pots can feel the thorns. Before the blaze from the dried thorn can ascend to the pot placed over it, the wicked shall be swept away; an expression of suddenness expressively equivalent to that of the apostle, 'in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye,' I Co. 15. 52. C.

REFLECTIONS.—What a plague to a church or

REFLECTIONS. — What a plague to a church or nation are unjust rulers! Oppression by law is the most grievous tyranny; and good men often suffer by the partiality of unjust judges. Greatly humbling to such as see it is the wickedness of the human heart. And it makes those in whom it reigns earnest and ob-stinate in sinful courses. Neither the terrors of God's wrath nor the hopes of the gospel can effectually change it, only the Spirit of God can help to instruction. But it is a mercy for the saints that God cares for and protects them amidst such barbarous, brutish, and deceitful men, who have power on their sides; that he restrains these enemies by his power so that they waste themselves. In a sudden and tremendous manner they are sometimes destroyed. And howous manner they are sometimes destroyed. And now-ever the godly now pity the folly and bewail the con-duct of sinners, they will hereafter see God's justice in their punishment and bewail in their ruin. At last God will make the most haughty and brutish to know that he governs the world; and that it is only in the way of holiness and virtue that real happiness is to be found.

PSALM LIX. Ver. 1. The speaker declaring his innocence from transgression, sin, or fault, ver. 3, 4, can surely be no other than Jesus, who, while 'he bore our sins,' because 'the Lord laid' them on him, was yet in his own person 'holy, harmless, and undefiled.' C. Ver. 6. The dogs which, in eastern cities, have neither masters nor homes, go about the streets by night in search of food—always noisy, and often troublesome. C.

THE WALLS OF TIBERIAS—NEAR HAMATH, OF OLD TESTAMENT TIMES. [Psalms,, lxviii:27.]—"There is little Benjamin with their ruler, the princes of Judah and their council, the princes of Zebulun, and the princes of Naphtali." Tiberias was a city of Zebulun, and was formerly occupied, according to Joshua, xix:35, by Rakkath, and is also near the hot baths referred to in Joshua, xix:35 as Hamath. The walls of the city were rebuilt by Justinian.

The city was captured by the Persians under Khosrces in 614 B. C. In 1738 Dhahr-el-'Amr built a fort on the hill north of Tiberias and repaired the walls of the city, which suffered terrible damage through the earthquake of 1837. There are now in Tiberias about six thousand people, four thousand of whom are Jews, three hundred are Christians and the rest Moslems. This is one of the four sacred cities of the Jews in Palestine,

10 The God of my mercy shall prevent me: God' shall let me see my desire upon mine enemies.9

11 Slay* them not, lest my people forget: scatter" them by thy power; and bring them down, O LORD our shield.

12 For the sin of their mouth, and the words of their lips, let them even be taken in their pride; and for cursing and lying which they speak.

13 Consume them in wrath, consume them, that they may not be; and let them know that God ruleth in Jacob unto the ends of the earth. Selah.2

14 And at evening let them return; and let them make a noise like a dog, and go round about the city.

15 Let them wander up and down for meat,3 and grudge if they be not satisfied.4

16 But I will sing of thy power; yea, I will sing aloud of thy mercy in the morning: for thou hast been my defence and refuge in the day of my trouble.

17 Unto thee, O my strength, will I sing: for God is my defence, and the God of my mercy.

To the chief musician upon a Neginah, A psalm of David.

REFLECTIONS.—Firm faith of our spiritual interest in God encourages to bold supplications in a day of trouble. None can destroy if he defend us. Though none be innocent before God, they may be so before men, at least with respect to particular crimes. And such innocence, though it cannot protect us from evil men, may encourage our appeals to God for redress. It is common for sinners to think that God overlooks their wickedness; but the awful punishment thereof will make them know that he observed it. If we wait on God and depend on his mercy, we are sure of preservation in trials and even of prevention with favours. But how dreadful is their danger against whom the prayers of Christ and his people ascend! The tongue, defiled with slander, cursing, and falsehood, will themet with stander, cursing, and tamenous, with bring to itself misery. The punishment which God inflicts on men, correspondent to their sins, will force them to know his existence and government: and the sufferings of Jesus Christ and his people shall at last issue in everlasting honours, triumphs in their God, and praises for his mercy and kindness.

PSALM LX. Ver. 1. Scattered. Though Israel and Judah were both led captive, they were never scattered among the nations (De. 28. 64) till after the crucifixion of our Lord. PSALM LXIII.

1 David's thirst after God. 4 His manner of blessing God. 9 His confidence of his enemies' destruction, and of his own rejoicing.

A psalm of David, when he was in the wilderness of Judah

O GOD, thou art my God; early will I seek thee: my soul thirsteth for thee, my flesh longeth for thee in a dry and thirsty 2land, where no water is;

2 To see thy power and thy glory, so as I. have seen thee in the sanctuary.

4 Thus hwill I bless thee while I live: I will 'lift up my hands in thy name.

5 My soul shall be satisfied as with marrow

the restoration, the emblem also of the spiritual endowment and temporal blessedness of the Gentile church. C.

Ver. 6. Shechem was the first place in Canaan where ground was purchased for the permanent erection of the altar El-elohe-Israel, Ge. 33. 19. It was also the place to which Joshua summoned the tribes, and where they ratified their covenant with God, Jos. 24. 1, 25. It was also a city of refuge, Jos. 20. 7. It literally signifies a portion. From which four particulars, the meaning of the promise may be fully gathered. C.

Ver. 8. Weshpol, or basin: not a phrase of contempt, or sign of servility, but rather of tender friendship and hospitable entertainment, see Lu. 7. 44; Jn. 31. 44, 15.—Cats my shoe. This phrase some interpret of taking possession; others of servile subjugation: is it not rather a token of friendly visitation, and peaceful entering into all the dwellings of the land, according to the eastern custom of putting off the shoes at the entrance of a dwelling or chamber?—Philistia I land of hereditary enemies, triumph in my victory of love that has conquered thy enmity. C.

Ver. 11. Vain is the help of man. Hence we learn that the victory expected is not that which can be wrought by the power or wrath of man—and not a victory over the literal Moab, Edom, and Philistia, but a spiritual victory of truth and love over the enemies of Jesus, represented by those nations. C.

REFLECTIONS. —What terrible rejection of God, what fearful convulsions and miseries in nations and absorbance are accessioned by sin 1. But the deeper our what fearful convulsions and miseries in nations and churches, are occasioned by sin! But the deeper our distresses are, the more is the power and grace of our God magnified in our deliverance. Not David raised to a throne, according to promise, but Jesus exalted to his Father's right hand, and manifested in the truth of the gospel, is our banner displayed,—our means of victory and deliverance: let us then look to him and be saved. If sin has made deadly breaches, the sovereign grace of God can repair them. If we turn to him in prayer we may expect his return in mercy to us. Having loved us freely his right hand can save us. Our deliverance may be delayed, but faith triumphs. While Jesus subdues his opposers in mercy, or destroys all opposition, let us gladly receive him, and every all opposition, let us gladly receive him, and every promised blessing of grace or glory will necessarily follow. It may often happen that our bitterest enemies become our friends. At his pleasure he can unite nations and churches. Whatever difficulties then stand in our way let faith overcome them. Though we seem cast off, let us cleave fast to the promise, and trust and wait for the salvation of God. The greater The greater our danger, our cries and prayers ought to be the more earnest. Let us put no trust in human helps; but in God's name and strength encounter our spiritual enemies; and so shall our victory be sure.

PSALM LXI. Ver. 1. That this is a prophetic prayer of the Messiah cannot be doubted, when the description of his immortal person and reign, ver. 6, 7, are considered. Of no other can they be spoken—of him they are literally true, therefore to him they infallibly belong. C. Ver. 2. This is the prayer of an exile, far from home, and far from God's sanctuary. If written by David, as is probable, it must have been during Absalom's rebellion. Even then, when in trouble and in imminent danger, his faith in God does not desert him. Sustained by it he rises above temporary calamities and predicts his triumphant return to his home, and concludes with the noble declaration, 'So will I sing praise unto thy name for ever; that I may daily perform my vows.' P.—Higher than I. He that was 'in the form of God,' and who 'counted it not robbery to be equal with God,' having taken 'the form of a servant, and humbled himself,' uses these words, sustained by 'the joy set before him,' Phi. 2. 6-11; He. 12. 2. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Often are the spirits overwhelmed.

REFLECTIONS. - Often are the saints overwhelmed with their sense of sin, their troubles, temptations, and fears. But whatever we be, and in whatever condition, a throne of grace and a prayer-hearing God are at hand to apply to. Jesus, the establishing and protecting Rock, is near; and his Word and Spirit are ready to lead us to him. And every former experience of protection or deliverance ought to encourage our flight to his refuge. Our trusting to his promises, peringht to his refuge. Our trusting to his promises, perfections, and providences, and our cordial worship of him here, will issue in our being for ever with him in his mansions of glory above.—God hears our prayers, regards our vows, and will provide for us everything good. We are heirs of God and joint heirs with good. We are heirs of God and joint-neirs with Christ. Since King Jesus for ever lives, for ever sits enthroned amidst mercy and truth, we may confidently expect to live and reign with him in everlasting felicity and praise. Let then the vows which we have made be conscientiously performed; and let praising of God and paying of our vows be our daily employment.

PSALM LXII. Ver. 1. The speaker is one who boldly affirms, ver. 6, 'I shall not be moved.' He who can so speak cannot be David the son of Jesse, who was subject to so many vicissitudes; but his greater Son, who was never 'moved' from his purpose of grace, and cannot be 'moved' from his kingdom of glory. C.

his purpose of grace, and cannot be 'moved' from his kingdom of glory. C.

Ver. 3. The second clause of this verse may be translated as follows:—'How long will ye assail (or attempt to slay)? all of you shall be as a bowing wall, a tottering fence.' that is, though you attempt my life, ye shall fail; you will fall to the ground helpless as a shattered wall. P.

Ver. 9. A lite—not necessarily litars, but a lite, appearing to enjoy happiness, and secure a stable perpetuity, yet subject to as many sorrows and vicissitudes as the men of 'low degree,' by whom they are so often envied. C.

Ver. 12. Neither the pursuit, nor the acquirement, nor the possession of riches, is evil: the evil lies in the 'love of money,' and the consequent expulsion of God from the heart, 1 Jn. 2.15. C.

Ver. 12. The general idea is that rank, wealth, worldly power, though good and useful in themselves when fairly acquired and rightly used, can never secure peace, or free man from trouble and death. To God alone belongeth true power, and he alone can give an eternal reward. P.

REFLECTIONS.—Patient and submissive resignation of our souls to God is the certain mean of a happy of our souls to God is the certain mean of a happy issue of all our troubles. He is the alone author and 1026 finisher of all our salvation. In so doing corruptions and temptations can shake us, but not drive us, either fully or finally, from grace. While liars and traitors meet with destruction from God, they who trust in him may defy hell or death to hurt them. In him they are saved, secured, strengthened, and pro-tected; and in him, not in themselves, do they glory. The more their faith in him is exercised the stronger it becomes. The more we trust in men, or in worldly enjoyments, the more disappointment and hurt we shall meet with. But the more we depend on, cry to, or consider God, we shall find the more pleasure, safety, and comfort. The mercy and power which we see in him shall be employed to furnish, protect, and reward us, and to cut off our enemies.

PSALM LXIII. Ver. I. David was away from the sanctuary when this psalm was written. It expresses the earnest longing desire of his soul for communion with God once again in his courts. The imagery is graphic. The desert traveller can fully realize it. As one longs for water in the parched wilderness, where the heaven is as brass and the earth as iron, so the psalmist longs for God. P.—On comparing Ac. 4. 25, 26 with Ps. it., 61.66; 63. II, there can remain no doubt that the King who speaks in this psalm is the Son of God, with whose supplications in the days of his fiesh the ancient church was thus prophetically edified. C.

Ver. 2. This exactly corresponds with the prayer of our Lord, Jn. 17. 5; And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self, with the glory that I had with thee before the world was. C. Ver. 11. Every one that svewareth by him shall glory. Every one that reverences his name, and acknowledges his omniscience and judgment. C.

REFLECTIONS.—What a dry and barren wilderness is this world, with nothing in it that can satisfy the longings of a soul! And the more we find of the emptiness of created enjoyments the more we should all the filese of Cod as our God and all sufficient fly to the fulness of God, as our God and all-sufficient portion. They who have experienced fellowship with him, and discoveries of his glory in public ordinances, will feelingly regret the want of them, and ardently desire the re-enjoyment of them. But great is the mercy that God himself, the fountain of happiness, and his throne of grace, are everywhere accessible. And if our hearts be refreshed with the tokens of his favour they ought to be enlarged in his praise. Happy and delightful is it to meditate on his loving kindness—and in his strength to follow him closely in the means of grace and paths of duty. It is his help and favour only that can tune our hearts to praise him while we enjoy his protection.—Dreadful is the destruction of the enemies of Jesus Christ and his people! But eternal shall be the honours and unspeakable the joys of him and his children, while all their malicious reproachers and PSALM LXIV. Ver. 1. The exact similarity of this psalm to Ps. lxiii. is sufficient external evidence that it is a prophetic prayer of Messiah; but there is an internal evidence that renders other proof unnecessary. The speaker (ver. 4) describes himself as the perfect, a description utterly inapplicable to any sinful man, and true only of the Christ. C.

REFLECTIONS .- A believer's troubles and enemies often fill his heart with fear, and drive him to his prayers. prayers. And in every age and place the bitterest words of reproach and infamy are liberally shot forth words of reproach and iniamy are independently shot form against the most faithful saints. Being perfect in Jesus' blessed sacrifice, and having the truth of grace in their hearts, they are hated by the world, who cannot bear their holy and heavenly constitution of the same state. versation. Daring in wickedness, their enemies often neither fear God nor regard man, but encourage one another in sin; nor do they stick at anything to accomplish their malicious designs. With what care they pry into the faults of the godly, suborn false witnesses, wrest their words, and eke out their defamations with impudent falsehoods! but God will at last adjudge the injuries done to his people. And when he strikes home there is no escaping. Then the reproaches of the wicked, and their horrid imprecations, shall draw down indoment on their own heads. And it is down judgment on their own heads. And it is our wisdom to profit by the judgments of others. Too often warnings are lost through inconsideration. Even persecutors ought to learn and tremble while the door of mercy is yet open. And saints should rejoice in God's manifestation of his power and justice, and in their own deliverance; and trust in him, and make him their glory.

PSALM LXV. Ver. 1. Praise waiteth for thee, O God, in Zion. 'Praise is silent for thee, O Lord,' silent, as if the heart of the church was too full of gratitude to find utterance; or, as an eastern servant, waiting in silence for a word or sign. C. Ver. 3. 'Our iniquities have prevailed over us; but our trespasses thou hast covered.'—Boothroyd. An exact description of justification by grace. See Ro. 4.6-8. C. Ver. 4. Blessed is the man, &c. The church here describes Messiah, upon whom all gifts originally descend, Ps. 68, 18; Ep. 4.8, and from whom they come down in rich and plenteous effusion of the Spirit showing the things of Christ. C. Ver. 5. By terrible things. The answer to all the prayers of faith is concentred in the Father's sending his Son: and most terrible of all the works of God was the deliverance of that Son to the death for the church that he loved, Ep. 5. 25-27. And when the church prays 'Thy kingdom come,' terrible are the judgments that will respond in the coming destruction of Satan's kingdom. C.

earth, so barbarous as to deny the being and power of God. God's tokens in the heavens, in the seasons, in thunder, in earth-quakes, and storms, produce in the ignorant a superstitious terror, and in the most instructed and pious humble and reverential awe. C.

be succeeded with joyful praises of him in his church and ordinances. And candid vows must be followed with conscientious fulfilment. God's readiness to hear orayer should encourage every one earnestly and hopefully to address him in every case: and sense of loading guilt or prevalent lusts ought not to make us despair but to implore, believe, and admire the pardoning and sanctifying mercy of God. Fellowship with God is our greatest happiness. And it is not our merit, but his gracious love and blessed grace, that brings us to it. Nor must it be by transient starts, but by a fixed attendance on the ordinances of his grace, as nothing but the fulness of God in Christ can satisfy our hungry And however terrible the answer must be, God wherever they may be in the world, they have equal access to him as their trust and salvation. Everywhere in the works of nature we may discern the power, wisdom, goodness, and greatness of God. And everykingdom. C.

paries, from rains, from pastures, from fields, ought, with thankful admiration and praise, to be received as his gift. But in these let me discern, as in a figure, how he establishes his church, his ordinances, and his people. He limits, restrains, and directs their raging troubles. He enlightens by the word of his grace and the influences of his Spirit. And while Jesus, the Sun of Righteousness, rises with healing under his wings, his showers of gospel declarations and spiritual influences drop down abundantly, for the nourishment, satisfaction, and joy of the human race.

PSALM LXVI. Ver. 12. Thou hast caused men, &c. The Egyptian horsemen, whose representative descendants continue to this day to pay little regard to the safety of the humbler classes; and would, without compunction or rebuke, literally 'ride over their heads.' The expression here may probably refer to some elevated position in which the Egyptian horse appeared when pursuing Moses and the Israelites to the Red Sea. See ver. 6. C. Ver. 13. The speaker here, and to the end, is one—one who navs all his yows. and keeps all his resolutions—one so thoroughly pays all his vows, and keeps all his resolutions—one so thoroughly wise, that he knows his own heart; and so thoroughly pure, that

(ver. 18) he disclaims all iniquity; one whose prayer, consequently, God hath not turned away, ver. 20. Are not these marks sufficient to show that this perfect one is the Christ, entering as Highpriest into the holy place? C.

REFLECTIONS.—With cordiality and joy ought all men to celebrate the praises of that God who is so great and so good to all. And as our fathers' sins should awaken our sorrows, their mercies should in-flame our praise. But quickly shall antichristians and other enemies of our all-governing Lord Jesus be made to bow or be destroyed before him! All the trials of churches or saints, their support and protection in them, and the happy issue of them, ought, and shall be, matter of cordial and lasting praise: and to make vows in an evangelical manner when under trouble is truly commendable; but much care must always be taken for the speedy and exact performance of them. To testify our gratitude to God, and to encourage others in his way, we ought prudently to communicate our most noted experiences of his goodness and grace. No duty performed amidst indulged wickedness can be acceptable to God. But such as in faith pour out their hearts unto God without any allowed guile, may now begin their praises and thanksgiving, in the confidence that their requests are accepted, and shall in due time be answered.

PSALM LXVII. Ver. 1. The choir of believers, that, in the last portion of the foregoing psalm, have been silently listening to their Lord, here resume their part in the worship of Jehovah, the light of whose glory they desire to behold in the face of Jesus Christ. 2 Co. 4.6. C.

Ver. 2. Thy saving health among all nations. Literally 'thy salvation among all nations.' It is a prayer for the universal diffusion of the knowledge of God, and especially the knowledge of the way in which he saves sinners. P.

PSALM LXIX.

1 Darid complaineth of his affliction. 13 He prayeth for deliverance. 22 He devoteth his enemies to destruction. 30 He engageth to praise God with thanksgiving.

To the chief musician upon aShoshannim, A psalm of David.

CAVE me, O God; for bthe waters are come in unto my soul.

2 Ic sink in deep mire, where there is no standing: I am come into deep waters,2 where the floods overflow me.

3 Id am weary of my crying: my throat is dried: mine eyes fail while I wait for my God.

4 They that hate me without a cause are more than the hairs of mine head: they that would destroy me, being mine enemies wrongfully, are mighty: then I restored that which I took not away.3

blessed time when 'the kingdoms of this world shall have become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ.' Re. 11. 15. C. Ver. 6. This psalm sets forth a great principle which people and nations ought never to forget—that true religion can alone secure national blessings—peace, progress, temporal prosperity, and social happiness. P.

REFLECTIONS. - God's mercy is the spring and matter of all the blessings we need. His favour manifested is our whole joy and comfort. And the more kindness he bestows upon any person or church, the more they wish his gospel and kingdom to spread. His method of redeeming and saving men through Christ is health to their soul and marrow to their bones. It is an unspeakable mercy to be judged and governed according to the gospel and promise of grace. The service of Christ is the freedom and happiness of his service of Christ is the freedom and happiness of his people; and his government introduces the most inestimable benefits and exalted praises. What a harvest of converted souls the world yields as he pours to converted souls the world yields as he pours to converted souls the world yields as he pours to converte the world yields as he would yield yield yields as he woul forth his influences! And blessings innumerable flow from a spiritual relation to God as our God: while reverential love and holy obedience always attend the firm faith thereof.

- 6 Leth not them that wait on thee. O Lord God of hosts, be ashamed for my sake: let not those that seek thee be confounded for my sake, O God of Israel.
- 7 Because for thy sake I have borne reproach; shame hath covered my face.

8 I^j am become a stranger unto my brethren, and an alien unto my mother's children.

9 Fork the zeal of thine house hath eaten me up; 'and the reproaches of them that reproached thee are fallen upon me.

10 When I wept, and chastened my soul with fasting, that was to my reproach.

11 Io made sackcloth also my garment; and I became a proverb to them.

12 They that sit in the gate speak against me; and I was athe song of the drunkards.7

13 But as for me, my prayer is unto thee, O LORD, in an acceptable time: O God, in the multitude of thy mercy hear me, in the truth of thy salvation.

14 Deliver me out of the mire, and let me not sink: let me be delivered from them that hate me, and out of the deep waters.

15 Let not the water-flood overflow me. neither let the deep swallow me up, and let not the pit shut her mouth upon me.

16 Hear me, O Lord; for thy loving-kindness is good: turn unto me, "according to the cooking to the cooki multitude of thy tender mercies.

Ver. 4. 'Magnify him who rideth over the Arabah by his name JAH, and rejoice before him.' Reference is here made to the journey of the Israelites through the wilderness, and especially along the valley of Arabah to and from Kadesh. There God went before them in the cloudy pillar; there he proclaimed to them his name JENOVAH; there he gave them displays of his power and mercy, such as had never been witnessed. P.——By his name JAH JI JAH is his name, 'Horsely. That is, Christ, who was with the church through the wilderness, has his personal and official name in JAH, the unity of the self-existent Trinity. C. Ver. 11. Company. The original directs to those female choirs (see ver. 25) who, in sweet, and holy, and joyful song, published the mercies of the Lord. See, as examples, Ex. 15. 20; 1 Sa. 18. 5. C.

Ver. 12. Allusion is made to the conquests of Moses and Joshua on entering Palestine. P.

Ver. 13. The whole book of Psalms presents no greater difficulty than this verse, and conjectures and emendations have been proportionally numerous. The words supplied in the authorized version render the passage prophetical; but the adjoining verses are merely narrative. May we not therefore rather understand the passage thus:—'Ve have shared the spoil (though ye lay timidly at home, hid among the pots), and are now garnished in these spoils as the wings of a dove covered with silver, &c. ? C.

Ver. 22. My people. Is it not rather the enemy, that God proposes to bring from Bashan on the east, and the sea on the west, that judgment may be executed upon their sins? Joel 3. 2, 12; Re. 16. to. C.

Ver. 27. In the solemn procession, mentioned in ver. 24, all these tribes were present:—Benjamin on this occasion leading the way; the vast multitudes of Judah following: then the chiefs of Zebulun and Naphtali, representing probably the confederation of the northern tribes. P.

Ver. 30. 'The meaning of the whole verse is, that the most formidable enemies of the people of God, represented here by wild beasts, would bring presents, —by gods.—Note, Such is the blindness of the human heart, that the cow is still worshipped as a deity in India! C.

REFLECTIONS. -No hatred, no opposition of men or devils, could exclude our Redeemer from his glory. However strong or obstinate his enemies, they are overcome by his power. But happy—thrice happy are they who have by faith accepted this glorious, this gracious JEHOVAH to be their God! Behold how he protects his afflicted church and people; raises up families of saints in our Gentile world; delivers the prisoners of sin and Satan from their chains of corruptions and curses! while sinners bring to themselves eternal ruin! Behold him leading up his people from their spiritual bondage, and by his Word and Spirit directing them in their paths! By his almighty influence he brought down all opposition By showers of gospel truths and spiritual influences he quickens all who yield themselves to Christ. By the multitudes of his apostles and ministers he published the glad tidings of salvation. Through their faith he saves hell-enslaved sinners by his blood, and adorns them with his righteousness and grace. He established his church firm and high as mountains which cannot be moved, and from which he will never depart. While angelic hosts are her guard, the ascending Redeemer is her conquering head, her treasury, and almoner. How great are his triumphs, his grace, his almoner. Frow great are his trainiphs, his grace, his glory! Never pardoned rebel owed such gratitude to his generous prince as every pardoned sinner owes to his Lord. Never is he weary of showing mercy. And even death is disarmed to them who by faith accept him might be made rich.—And let me be a living and lively and his salvation. But dreadful is the fate of obstinate Jews and others who oppose the designs of his grace: and behold, when he went forth in the ordinances of the gospel, by his apostles and other missionaries, how Jews and Gentiles saw his glory, sang his praise, and submitted themselves to his government!

PSALM LXIX. Ver. 1. It is impossible to question that this is a prayer of our Lord. See especially ver. 9, first clause, compare with Jn. 2. 17, also ver. 9, second clause, with Ro. 15. 3, and ver. 25, also with Jn. 19. 28; and surely it is impossible to doubt that Christ is the speaker of the whole psalm! See also farther references, Jn. 15. 25; Lu. 23. 24-38; Ro. 11. 9, 10; Ac. 11. 6, 20. C. Ver. 22. Nothing is more certain than that God judicially delivers wicked men over to the counsels of their own hearts, and surely what God will righteously do, Christ as Judge may righteously dupon him to do. In this case, he calls upon him to deliver over the epicurean idolater, 'whose god is his belly,' Phi. 3. 19, so that his love of gluttony and drunkenness may become his punishment. C.

REFLECTIONS. - While I read these things let me, with deep concern, by faith behold my Redeemer charged in law with my sins and bearing their punishment. Let me learn with patience to run the race of holy obedience, and of necessary trials set before me, looking to Jesus as my pattern, and as the author and finisher of my faith. While I behold the tremendous severity of God's judgments against his ancient people for rejecting and murdering his Son, let me not be high-member of that church which is founded in his blood, and blessed in him with all spiritual blessings.

PSALM LXX. Ver. z. This psalm exemplifies the two chief principles for interpretation of the Psalms, viz. z. Quotation and exposition in the New Testament. z. Parallelism of sentiment between those which New Testament quotation applies to Christ and those not so quoted. The parallelism between Ps. lxx. to this fact is put beyond question by its identity with Ps. 40. 23-27, which psalm is distinctly applied to Christ, He. 10. 5. C.

PRUFERSONS—While here also I behold Icone

REFLECTIONS.—While here also I behold Jesus Christ in great abasement, poverty, and distress, denouncing just and fearful punishment on his Jewish, heathen, antichristian, and other enemies; and interceding for the joy and happiness of all people; to his Fether's honour left me apply these things to my common the property in the control of the property in the property Father's honour let me apply these things to my own troubled circumstances, and so, in a believing manner, bring them and the sinful causes thereof to my remembrance. Urgent trials should always awaken fervent prayers.

PSALM LXXI. Ver. 2. Deliver me in thy righteousness. A sinner is to be delivered only in mercy—the sin-bearing Saviour alone in righteousness. By this mark it is evident, that if the speaker was guided by the Spirit of knowledge, a point not to be doubted, he must be the Christ. C. Ver. 9. Old age. Inasmuch as our Lord died literally young, this verse is supposed necessarily to indicate another speaker. But old age is not absolute, but comparative. Thus it is common to speak of premature old age, a fact evidently true of our Lord, whom a little after thirty the Jews supposed fifty. The period referred to, when, as in old age, his strength failed, seems literally, that, when worn out with sleeplessness, buffetings, and soorgings, and, tottering under his cross, Simon of Cyrene was compelled to carry it, Jn. 19. 17; Lu. 23, 26. C.

Ver. 18. When I am old, &c. Better, as in the margin, 'Now also unto old age and gray hairs, O God, forsake me not.' That our Lord was, in the ordinary acceptation of the word, prematurely old—consumed by his zeal—both himself and the Jews testified. Nor is anything more probable, that his incessant sorrows had produced, what sorrow has often produced—premature gray hairs, the snows of an unnatural winter enshrouding the greenness of spring. C. Ver. 21. This is surely not descriptive of David's expectations or experience. God had positively told him, 'the sword should never depart from his house,' 2 Sa. 12. 10, 11, and from that hour onwards his whole life was a succession of troubles. But of Jesus the description is true; for his declarative greatness is ever increasing, and 'the joy set before him' was his sun of comfort in the darkest hour of sorrows. C.

REFLECTIONS.—They who know God and his faithfulness and grace will with comfort and confidence be engaged to trust him in every time of need. The more we reflect on what God hath done for us, it will more we reflect on what God hath done for us, it will the more engage our trust and animate our praise. In the depth of our misery God delights to magnify his mercy. And they who confidently plead his faithfulness shall never be disappointed. In old age we must expect infirmities; but God can give an increase of faith and patience to bear them. His aged servants are never cast off by him; but when they experience most weakness, they shall most assuredly experience abundant support in time of need. He may afflict his people, but never rejects believers. Their enemies may boast in vain a while, but just ruin shall reward them at last. Happy they whose grand supports are the power and promise of God, and whose early and long-continued experience of his favours encourages them to continued experience of his favours encourages them to maintain their hopes and increase in their holiness.

And if we hope for eternal happiness, let us do what And it we nope for eternal nappiness, let us do what we can to spread the honour and good savour of Christ on earth! For how becoming is it for aged saints to be remarkable in cheerfully expecting good at the hand of God; and to have heart, and lips, and life all filled with his praise! How pleasant is it to step as it were into heaven scarcely reaching to change either the same were into heaven, scarcely needing to change either our work or our song!

PSALM LXXII. Ver. 1. The strict parallelism of the opening of this with Ps. ii., and the New Testament application of that psalm to Christ, necessarily leads to a similar application here. Christ was King, as chosen, sent, and exalted of the Father; he was also the King's Son, as, according to the flesh, he was the Son of David. C.

Ver. 5. This exemplifies an important principle of interpretation, viz. what cannot be true of David or any other mere man, but is true of Messiah, is not to be applied to any mere man, but to 'the Word that was God,' and was, for our salvation, 'made flesh,' and of whom the description is strictly accurate. See also ver. 7. C.

Ver. 7. The moon is here introduced as the emblem of successive change of aspect, with permanence of nature, and faithfulness of service; the measuring out of the returning periods for renovated joy, in which she places before the world at once the character both of providence and grace. C.

Ver. 11. This can only be true of Messiah, never of David or Solomon, whose kingdom, in its highest splendour, was of very limited extent and of brief duration. C.

Ver. 7. The marks of Messiah are here so distinct, that they must be acknowledged. How sweet the name of Jesus to the ear, how glorious to the eye—it is the theme of heaven's loudest song, it is the light of heaven's brightest sun, 'and blessed be his glorious name to all eternity. The whole earth let his glory fill. Amen! so let it be! C.

power in heaven and earth, reigns over his gospel church! In infinite equity and wisdom he conducts his whole administration. By his righteousness he secured, by his intercession he procures, and by his word, ordinances, and Spirit, he confers on men peace with God, peace in the conscience, and with one another. Poor destitute sinners he supplies from his another. Poor destitute sinners he supplies from his fulness of blessings, and delivers them from the hand of sin, Satan, and the world, their oppressors. His spiritual influences, coming down in their season, shall render believers flourishing and fruitful in holiness. And how extensive his gospel church, comprehending both Jews and Gentiles—the wildest Arabs and most distant islanders not excepted! In it persons of every station, but chiefly of the poor, submit to his yoke, and devote themselves and all that they have to his service. Earnest are their prayers for his presence and power in his ordinances, and for his coming in the clouds; and high their songs of praise to his name. What commendations of him are in the word of the gospel! From him the corn of wheat, sown in death upon Calvary, and from the handful of gospel truth, sown among har dened hearts, shall proceed converts, strong and tall in grace as the cedars of Lebanon, and numerous as the piles of grass. How lasting is his kingdom, and how certainly useful for diffusing every spiritual blessing among those who accept Jesus Christl United to his person, and sharing of his benefits, let us wish well to his interests and honour, and admire, adore, and praise JEHOVAH in him, as the author of all the wonders of providence and grace.

REFLECTIONS.—In our perplexing difficulties we ought to recur to the first principles of our most holy faith. And never should we lose the views of God's kindness to those who are washed in the blood and sanctified by the Spirit of his Son. Often the strongest believers are most violently tempted, and dragged to the very brink of death and destruction; while God, in this world, marks his enemies and friends in the most perplexing manner. The sinner often prospers to his ruin; and whom he loves he corrects and scourges for their profit. What need then have we to attend closely to his word as our rule; and amidst perplexing providences to wait till we see the end of the Lord! The worst that a good man hath is better than the prosperity of many wicked, which but brings them to everlasting ruin and hastens them into But whatever sad lengths the afflictions and temptations of the godly draw them, they should lead to instruction, humiliation, comfort, and holiness. atheistical thoughts arise in our hearts, they must be carefully and quickly suppressed. We must never grieve nor stumble the children of God by representing his service as vain and unprofitable. And it is not the his service as vain and unpromaine. And it is not the strongest carnal reasoning, but fellowship with God in his word and ordinances, that can illuminate a darkened soul, or disentangle from an ensnaring temptation. Great is the mercy when God relieves his children who had, by their envy and fretfulness, become their own tormentors; and that even at their worst he never ceases to attend and support them as weak infants in his family. But bright views of God and eternal things are sometimes ushered in by great darkness and trouble of mind. Holiness here and glory hereafter are closely connected. And little reason hath one, guided of God him, and an heir of everlasting harpiness. connected. And little reason natione, guided of God, and an heir of everlasting happiness, nay, of God himself, and a joint-heir with Christ, to envy the earthly happiness of the wicked. How insignificant other things appear when compared with the everlasting enjoyment of the INFINITE ALL, the REDEEMING GOD-HEAD! How light and easy are death and trouble when considered as our way to it! While apostates from God hasten towards endless perdition, let me therefore draw near to him, in habitual fellowship with him. Let me by faith depend on his promise, that here and hereafter my lips may be filled with his praise.

PSALM LXXIV. Ver. 1. This title (compare Ps. 95.7 with He. 3. 17), together with the plurality and circumstances of the form of speech, clearly point to a church cruelly persecuted, and a nation grievously oppressed, pouring out their complaints, not in the ears of men, but of God. C. Ver. 5. 'As men are seen with uplifted axes, cutting down the thick wood, so the whole carved work of thy temple with chisel

A LTAR OF LATIN CHURCH, NAZARETH—ON THE SITE OF THE HOUSE WHERE CHRIST LIVED. [Psalms, lxxii:8.]—"He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth." It seems as if the prophesies quoted from the above Psalm have been fulfilled when we remember that churches now stand in nearly all of the great cities of the world. The Latin church in Nazareth is called the Church of the Annunciation. The modern city of Nazureth consists of stone houses with flat roofs. The Church of the Annunciation is small, but it is decorated with pictures of great beauty and with finely wrought marble. It is said to stand on the site of the house of Mary. The church was begun in 1620 out of materials which remained from the ruins of former structures of a similar character. It was destroyed by an earthquake in 1837, but has been rebuilt. The name of Nazareth does not occur in the Old Testament nor in Josephus.

PSALM LXXIV.

1 The psalmist complaineth of the desolation of the sanctuary.
10 He moveth God to help in consideration of his power, 18 of his reproachful enemies, of his children, and of his covenant.

Maschil of Asaph,1

GOD, awhy hast thou cast us off for ever? buly doth thine anger smoke against the sheep of thy pasture?

2 Remember thy congregation, which thou hast purchased of old; the rod2 of thine inheritance,3 which thou hast redeemed; this mount Zion, wherein thou hast dwelt.

3 Lift up thy feet unto the perpetual desolations; even all "that the enemy hath done wickedly in the sanctuary.5

4 Thine enemies roar in the midst of thy congregations; they set up their ensigns for signs.6

5 A man was famous according as he had lifted up axes upon the thick trees.

6 But now they break down the carved work thereof at once with axes and hammers.

7 They have cast fire into thy *sanctuary; they have defiled by casting down the dwellingplace of thy name to the ground.

8 They said in their hearts, Let us edestroy them together: they have burnt up all the synagogues of God in the land.

9 We see not our signs:9 there is no more any prophet; neither is there among us any that knoweth how long.

10 O God, phow long shall the adversary reproach? shall the enemy blaspheme thy name for ever?

11 Whyq withdrawest thou thy hand, even thy right hand? pluck it out of thy bosom.

12 For God is my King of old, working salvation in the midst of the earth.

OUNT OF OLIVES FROM ZION'S GATE—OVER WHICH DAVID WALKED AND WEPT DURING ABSALOM'S REBELLION. [Psalms, lxxiv:2.]—"Remember thy congregation, which thou hast purchased of old; the rod of thine inheritance, which thou hast redeemed; this Mount Zion, wherein thou hast dwelt." Mount Zion occupies the southwest section of the city. The west and south sides rise abruptly from the valley of Hinnom, and the south brow of Zion is bold and prominent. The Mount of Olives from Mount Zion is an inspiring sight. The graceful outlines of the Mount of Olives are conspicuous from every part of the city. We see on the summit of the central crest the lofty tower erected by the Russians. There are many buildings upon the Mount of Olives and they interfere with the simple beauty of the sacred hill. It is over the Mount of Olives that David ascended when fleeing from his rebel son Absalom (II. Samuel, xv:30).

17 Thous hast set all the borders of the earth: thou hast made? summer and winter.

18 Remember this, that the enemy hath reproached, O Lord, and that the foolish people have blasphemed thy name.

19 O deliver not the soul of thy turtle-dove unto the multitude of the wicked: forget not the congregation of thy poor for ever.

20 Have respect unto the covenant: for the dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty.

21 O elet not the oppressed return ashamed: let the poor and needy praise thy name.

Ver. 17. Summer and winter. Therefore the God by whose power the glory of light emerges from the deformity of darkness, and the beauty of summer from the desolation of winter, is able to grant deliverance from enemies, and bring comfort out of sorrow. See ver. to. C.

Ver. 20. 'The prayer in this passage may with propriety be used by the people of God now. It is still true that 'the dark parts of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty,' and in view of this fact, and of the utter hopelessness of the renovation of the world by any human means, or by any progress which society can make of itself, it is proper to seek God's interposition. And it is proper in such prayers to him now, to make the ground of our appeal to him his own gracious covenant; his promises made to his church; his solemn assurance that this state of things shall not always continue, but that the time will arrive when the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord' (Barnes). P

REFLECTIONS.—Alas! to what melancholy apprehensions of their state and case are the people of God sometimes reduced! They fear that the rod of his correction is the sword of his judgment. But though he cast them down, he will not forsake believers. They who are redeemed hy Iesus' blood his correction is the sword of his judgment. Due though he cast them down, he will not forsake believers. They who are redeemed by Jesus' blood should not come under the bondage of corruption. The favours which they have received are a presage, and ought to be made a plea for greater. While and ought to be made a plea for greater. While worldly minds feel only worldly crosses, the interests of religion and welfare of the church are incomparably degreest to the children of Cod Analysis. dearest to the children of God. And however certain the ruin which will fall upon the destroyers of his church at last, it is extremely affecting to behold them making havor of God's truths, ordinances, or people, while there is none to comfort us or to explain the dark providences. But under sore troubles it is proper to commemorate and plead upon God's former and dis-tinguished mercies. He who divided the Red Sea and He who divided the Red Sea and destroyed Pharaoh and his host, and who brought waters from the rock for Israel; he who is the Sovewaters from the rock for israer; he who is the Sovereign of nature, can, at his pleasure, command our and his church's deliverance. Importunate wrestlings and pleadings with God for the relief of his church, which is so dear to him, and for fulfilling his promise, of which he is ever mindful, and for destroying his daring and implacable reproachers, will not be long unanswered.

PSALM LXXV. Ver. 3. The single speaker can be no other than Messiah, prophetically arrived in his church. None but Christ alone could, without vain boasting and arrogance, attribute to himself such mighty power.—Aote, The world, with all its institutions, is preserved from ruin merely that Christ may be glorified.

REFLECTIONS.—While we think of Jesus Christ, whom God has marvellously crowned with glory and honour, and of the infinite danger of opposing his government, let us remark what wonderful works of God have been exercised to usward. Great is the praise which we owe to God on every review of his mercies. Important and useful is the charge which is committed to magistrates and ministers: and there is great need of activity and care in their administrations, as they must be accountable to God, from whom they received their power. One true patriot 1036 may sometimes save a disjointed church or state from impending ruin. But vain and dangerous is it to with-stand God's deputies. The righteous shall be advanced and flourish, while obstinate sinners shall be plunged into everlasting misery.

PSALM LXXVI. Ver. 1. In Yudah God is known. God was known in the doctrine that expressed his nature—in the commandments that prescribed his will—in the history that recorded his acts—and the prophecy that foretold his coming to salvation, victory, and judgment. C.

Ver. 4. This is a passage of great difficulty. May it not be paraphrased thus: 'Thou Zion, undistinguished among cities, art yet, as the dwelling-place of God, more excellent than them all; and thou, Salent, taught by thy very name to cultivate peace, art yet, in that peace of God, more glorious than the mountains of the warriors—their strongholds and fortresses—enriched and stored with all the spoils of conquest.' C.

Ver. 9. Though spoken of as an event past, these words are evidently a description of a time still plature—a mode of speech common with the prophets (see, for example, 1s. 5. 3), the time at which God will arise and have mercy upon Zion, and save in his judgment all the meek of the earth. C.

REFLECTIONS. — Happy are those nations and REFLECTIONS.—Happy are those nations and churches which have the knowledge and presence of God in them! How profitable, pleasant, and enriching! Gloriously he protects them in danger, and destroys their enemies, however mighty or numerous. Their tyrannical oppressors, though like mountains of prey, shall destroy themselves utterly. His meek ones must indeed patiently wait awhile; but at last he will, to the terror of all around, appear for their relief. Whatever his people suffer shall but brighten their graces and

8 Is his mercy clean gone for ever? doth his promise fail for evermore?6

9 Hath God forgotten to be gracious? hath he in anger shut up his tender mercies? Selah.

10 And I said, This is my infirmity: but I will remember the years of the right hand of the most High.7

11 Is will remember the works of the LORD; surely I will remember thy wonders of old.

12 I will tmeditate also of all thy work, and talk of thy doings.8

13 Thy" way, O God, is in the sanctuary:9 who is so great a God as our God?

14 Thou art the God that doest wonders: thou, hast declared thy strength among the people.

15 Thou hast with thine arm redeemed thy people, the sons of Jacob and Joseph. Selah.

16 The waters saw thee, O God, the waters saw thee; they were afraid: the depths also were troubled.

17 The clouds poured out water: the skies sent out a sound: thine barrows also went abroad.

PSALM LXXVIII.

1 An exhortation both to learn and to preach the law of God. 9 The story of God's wrath against the incredulous and disobedient. 67 The Israelites being rejected, God chose Judah, Zion, and David. Maschil of Asaph.1

IVE aear, O bmy people, to my law:2 incline your ears to the words of my mouth.

2 İ will open my mouth in a parable; I will utter dark sayings of old:4

3 Which we have heard and known, and our fathers have told us.

4 We will not hide them from their children, showing to the generation to come the praises of the Lord, and his strength, and his wonderful works that he hath done.5

5 For he established a testimony in Jacob, and appointed a law in Israel, which he commanded our fathers, "that they should make them known to their children:

6 That the generation to come might know them, even the children which should be born; who should arise and declare them to their chil-

7 That i they might set their hope in God, and not forget the works of God, but keep his commandments:

8 And might not be 'as their fathers, a stubborn and rebellious generation; a generation that set not their heart aright,6 and whose spirit was not steadfast with God.

9 The children of Ephraim, being armed, and carrying, bows, "turned back in the day of battle.

10 They kept not the covenant of God, and refused to walk in his law;

11 And^p forgat his works, and his wonders that he had showed them.

12 Marvellous things did he in the sight of their fathers, in the land of Egypt, in the field of ^rZoan.

13 Hes divided the sea, and caused them to pass through; and he made the waters to stand as an heap.

14 Int the day-time also he led them with a cloud, and all the night with a light of fire.

redound to his glory. And whatever of his enemies' fury hath not this tendency he restrains. The more awful our God and our deliverances are, the more ought we to wait on him, fear him, and make and pay grateful vows to him.

PSALM LXXVII. Ver. 1. There is one, and one only, 'whom the Father heareth always.' Jn. 11. 42, and in whose name alone are the prayers of sinners heard—that one is Christ. C.

Ver. 15. The sons of Yoseph who was sold into slavery—the sons of Yacob who were brought into it in search of food, and hope of protection and prosperity. The first, the emblem of the spiritual man, for a time seduced, like Peter, to forget and deny his Lord. C.

Ver. 18. There is here a description of a storm of rain, hail, thunder, and lightning, with most probably an earthquake, not recorded in any of the books of Moses. The occasional supply of such omissions, when thus furnished by the Spirit, is serviceable as reminding us that the Scriptures were written, not to be histories of men, but of God and his government—a consideration that will often solve the most remarkable Scripture difficulties. C.

REFLECTIONS.—What days of trouble saints have to endure from temptations, corruptions, afflictions, and desertions! and desertions! But in distress we must flee to the compassionate bosom of our God, and pour out our complaints before him. And if we would speed we must be both importunate and unwearied in our application. If we but speak in groans God can understand us and will answer. But often, under strong temptations, saints feed their sorrows and reject the consolations which God suggests to them in his Word: often they indulge the melancholy apprehension that he hath forsaken them and left them to eternal perdition. Terrible then is their case: and dishonourable to God is this their distrust. But hopeful is the appearance when they are brought to condemn their own unbelief, and to cast themselves on his almighty power and mercy; and when they continue meditating on and declaring his former almighty works of providence or grace. This awakens themselves and others to honourable thoughts of his conduct and to grateful praise. However deep and mysterious the dispensations of his providence, they are all holy and just. And however awful, they are infinitely gracious, and issue in the deliverance of believers from their manifold bondage, and in their guidance, by Jesus their great Leader and Priest, to the Canaan above.

PSALM LXXVIII. Ver. 8. Steadfast. Steadfastness is essential to religion, and is equally required in doctrine, testimony, and practice. Versatility and compliance will save for a time from many inconveniences that consistency must bear; but steadfastness will triumph in the end, while Reuben, unstable as mater, will never excel. C.

15 He clave the rocks in the wilderness, and gave them drink as out of the great depths.

16 He brought "streams also out of the rock, and caused waters to run down like rivers.

17 And *they sinned yet more against him, by provoking the most High in the wilderness.

18 Andy they tempted God in their heart, by asking meat for their lust.

19 Yea, they spake against God; they said, Can God furnish a table in the wilderness?

20 Behold, he smote the rock, that the waters gushed out, and the streams overflowed; can he give bread also? can he provide flesh for his people?

21 Therefore the Lord heard this, and bwas wroth; so a fire was kindled against Jacob, and anger also came up against Israel; 22 Because they believed not in God, and trusted not in his salvation;1

23 Though he had commanded the clouds from above, and opened the doors of heaven, 24 And had rained down manna upon them to eat, and had given them of the corn of heaven.

25 Man did eat 2angels food: he sent them meat to the full.

26 Heh caused an cost wind to bloom in the corn of the corn of heaven. 24 And had rained down manna upon them

26 Heh caused an east wind to blow in the heaven; and by his power he brought in the south wind.

27 He rained flesh also upon them as dust, and feathered fowls⁵ like as the sand of the sea;

28 And he let it fall in the midst of their camp, round about their habitations.

29 Soi they did eat, and were well filled: for he gave them their own desire;

30 They were not estranged from their lust: but while their meat was yet in their mouths, 31 The wrath of God came upon them, and slew the fattest of them, and smote down⁶ the chosen men7 of Israel.

32 For all this they sinned still, and believed not for his wondrous works.

Ver. 9. Ephraim. Ephraim is selected to exemplify the result of unsteadiness, (1) Because, as the chief son of Joseph, he inherited peculiar promises, Ge. 48. 20. (2) Because Ephraim was the ruling tribe at entering Canaan under Joshua. (3) Because Ephraim attained to supreme power in the ten tribes, Is. 7, 9. (4) Because Ephraim attained to supreme power in the ten tribes, Is. 7, 9. (4) Because Ephraim became conspicuous among the tribes for dissolution of morals and idolatry, Is. 17, 28; Ho. 8. 11. (3) Because God visited them with calamities as conspicuous as the privileges they abused, Ho. 5, 9, 12. C.

Ver. 32. To many unthinking persons it appears strange, almost, if not altogether, beyond credibility, that the Israelites could receive so many mercies, and feel so many judgments, and yet remain the sensual, stupid, stiff-necked, rebellious, and incorrigible people they are represented to have been. A little consideration of the disregard of God's mercies and judgments that may still be seen in the world would soon remove this surprise or incredulity, and enforce the conviction, that the providence of God, and the blindness and rebellion of men, still continue, as in the days of Moses, to refuse to be enlightened, and to spurn the hand that relieves and feeds them. C.

Ver. 34. When he shout them, &c. That is, when he was slaying them, then, out of fear, they sought him; an occurrence every day exemplified in sick-bed professions of sorrow for past sins, and resolutions of amendment for the future—professions and resolutions that are often forgotten so soon as returning health prepares the way for renewed temptation. C.

Ver. 57. Deceitful bow. The eastern bow is ordinarily composed of several pieces of different elastic materials, and when unstrung is recurved nearly not the form of a hoop; and, if the elastic tendency of the curvature vary in the least from the plane of the string, the bow, when the arrow will fall at the feet of the archer. C.

Ver. 59. When God heard: this. We know little more of the relations between men and angels, than that 'they are all ministering spirits sent forth to minister to them who shall be heirs of salvation,' and that there is 'joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth'—but these words seem also to intimate that the idolatites and other apostasies of the church may be brought up in heavenly records, or—if such in heaven there may be—even in holy lamentations 'to the ears of the God of Sabaoth.' C.

Ver. 64. No lamentation. It has often been remarked that among the many evils of continued public calamities, none is more grievous than the almost total destruction of sympathy and natural affection, and the paramount domination of selfishness. No instance can be more remarkable than that of a widow whose heart has been rendered so callous that she drops no tear of sorrow to the memory of the husband of her youth! C.

REFLECTIONS.-Important are the great things of God's law and the matters of our eternal salvation; and they demand the most serious attention. With great care ought parents to instruct children in the enowledge of the great truths and works of God. Neglect of this issues in children's unbelief, hypocrisy, and lasting ruin. And to avoid the bad effects of parents' guilt, children of wicked men ought to be doubly careful to avoid imitating them. How weak men are when God is their enemy; and how cowardly when their consciences are burdened with guilt! No miracles, however gracious and striking, can melt an ignorant and hardened heart, or induce it to gratitude. No favours will satisfy a discontented spirit, and restrain its malicious murmurings against God. With amazing patience and kindness God provides for his abusers amongst mankind! But when he gratifies sinabusers amongst mainting: Dut when he gratines sin-ners in their requests, his gifts become their snare and curse: this world's abundance is abused to excess: re-flection is banished: and men hurry headlong into ruin. They who make a god of their belly will find their end to be destruction; and they who will not be bowed by mercies or corrections must be broken by judgments. If sin be indulged sorrow must follow, Nor shall the stoutest be able to resist the uplifted arm of an angry God. Troubles often force men to their profession, prayers, or tears, whose wickedness is quickly thereafter discovered. The danger is scarcely blown over when all their convictions and promises are forgotten and contemned.—O the infinite compassion and patience of God towards all professing people! But, alas! his most singular favours and tremendous judgments are soon forgotten and despised!—The creatures of God sometimes become means, and in the most fearful manner cover his enemies with ruin. But abundant returns of thankfulness, love, and service are due to him from those to whom he has been liberal of his favours. How ready are most to imitate their wicked progenitors, to the dishonour of their gracious God! But more fearfully criminal is the unfaithfulnot their soul from death, but gave their life over to the pestilence;4 1 The psalmist complaineth of the desolation of Jerusalem. 21-prayeth for deliverance, 13 and promiseth thankfulness.

A psalm of Asaph.

GOD, "the heathen are come into "thine inheritance; thy holy temple have they defiled; they have laid Jerusalem on heaps.

- 2 The dead bodies of thy servants have they given to be meat unto the fowls of the heaven, the flesh of thy saints unto the beasts of the earth.
- 3 Their blood have they shed like water round about Jerusalem; and there was none to bury them.
- 4 Weg are become a reproach to our neighbours, a scorn and derision to them that are round about us.
- 5 Howh long, LORD? wilt thou be angry for ever? 'shall thy jealousy burn like fire?
- 6 Pour out thy wrath upon the heathen that have not known thee,2 and upon the kingdoms that have not called upon thy name.
- 7 For* they have devoured Jacob, and laid waste his dwelling-place.

ness of those who profess to serve him; it draws tre-mendous destruction upon the transgressors. If we forsake God he will forsake us; and no tabernacle, no formalities in religion, can avail us when he is departed. But however sharply he corrects faithful people, he hath still mercy in store for them. They who triumph over them a little shall quickly have their glory turned to shame: and he will maintain a church to himself for ever. If to punish one nation he remove their gospel candlestick, he will send the light of his truth to another, and often the most unlikely. And not David, but

Jesus Christ, shall for ever feed God's flock of ransomed men, according to the integrity of his heart and good skill of his hands.

PSALM LXXIX. Ver. 1. There is no internal note of the precise date of this psalm, and conjecture is us-less. It is enough to know that it records some one of those lamentable occasions upon which a righteous God gave up to judgment a backsliding and forgetful church. But let the Genile churchs recollect that such judgments are not confined to Israel, but are prophetically suspended over themselwes, should they fall into the Jewish sins of self-righteousness and unbelief, Ro. 9. 31: 10. 3: 11. 20, 21. C. Ver, 5. These words may have been, and probably were, descriptive of the ravages of the Babylonians, when the first temple was destroyed and Jerusalem laid waste; but they were also prophetic of more terrible calamities in the distant future. To this day the poor Jewa assemble at stated times outside the massive wall of the ancient temple area, and, wailing, chant these lines. P. KEFLECTIONS.—10 what tearful and lasting distress and desolation is the church of God sometimes brought, while forced to bear at once the cruelty and derision of men and the manifested displeasure of God! Humble prayers for forgiveness, poured forth in sighs and groans, and attended with deep concern for God's dishonour, will not be long unanswered. And deliverances, founded in pardon through Jesus' blood, will animate to cordial praise and thankfulness.

PSALM LXXX. Ver. 1. Leadest Jacob. In the pastoral countries of the East, the flock intrusted to a shepherd is generally under a hundred (see Mat. 18. 12); because it must be sedulously watched, and kept within the view of the shepherd, for fear of the predatory bands by whom these countries are infested. The shepherd accordingly teaches his flock to know. his voice, come at his call—he leads them, and they follow his movements, Jn. 10. 27. C.

Ver. 2. Before Ephraim—Joseph's first-born, by divine election; before Benjamin, Joseph's beloved brother; before Manasset, his first-born in point of time, but placed last by divine appointment, to teach families that the Lord reigneth in all their arrangements. These three tribes marched immediately before the Kohathites who carried the ark, Nu. 2. 17–24, 10. 21–24. C.

Ver. 13. The boar, &c. This is a literal representation of fact at this day in some of the vine districts of the East, especially in Mesopotamia. In the lips of a Jew, the words had a meaning doubly emblematic of the persecutors of the church, as represented not merely by a destructive but an unclear animal. C.

Ver. 17. Man of thy right hand. Let thy hand, anointing him to office and power, by the Holy Ghost, be upon Messiah, the man who is to be exalted to thy 'night hand'—the 'Son of man' who comes to redeem the world. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Great is the mercy that God is that he is a God reconciled in Christ, to the everlasting wonder of angels and men—and that now it is not the lewish tribes who marched after the ark in the desert, but multitudes of Gentiles, that see his salvation. Awakened souls ardently desire reconciliation with God, and repeated manifestations of his favour. And if we are turned to God by faith, we cannot fail to inherit his eternal glory. But through seeming rejection of prayers and angry frowns from God, and through tears, griefs, and reproaches, must we sometimes go thither. With what kind care did God settle the Israelites in Canaan and make them flourish there! With how much more did he gather, found, and increase his gospel church! But, alas! the misery and ruin that sin draws down upon the best-constituted churches and nations. Enemies, furious as wild beasts, waste them when God withdraws his protection. Yet the design hereof is not his people's ruin; but to excite their prayers, quicken their repentance, and magnify the wonders of his power and grace in their deliver-ance. It is impossible for his church to be ruined when her help is laid on her almighty Redeemer, the man of God's right hand. God's love for us is the ness of grace. Through him strengthening us, we can do all things.

REFLECTIONS.—Great is the mercy that God is the shepherd, leader, and protector of his people—

No wonder then that prayer is the daily employment of such as are spiritually alive; and that a sense of God's favour is more earnestly desired than the removal of any affliction

PSALM LXXXI. Ver. 1. God is called the God of Jacob, in reference to the following circumstances in Jacob's history:—
(1) He was a specimen, representative, or type of the electing grace of God, Ro. 9. 17. (2) He learned, by grace, to prize the birthright. (3) He was willing to purchase it with his food, th. representative of his life. (4) He was forced into exile, and became a stranger, a pilgrim. (5) He was tried with hard became a stranger, a pilgrim. (5) He was tried with hard measures by his friends. (6) He was a faithful servant. (7) He was an affectionate husband and parent. (8) He was a bold wrestler in prayer—utterly refusing to resign without a blessing. (6) He was the father of a numerous progeny. (10) He was, in the fulfilment of prophecy, and the designs of Providence, led down into Egypt. (11) He was brought up from it after death—an emblem of deliverance by the resurrection. (12) He rested in the land of promise. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Dignified is the office of magistrates, as the deputies of God. And with solemn awe and strict equity ought they to fix their decisions, as in God's presence, and as accountable to him. Yet how commonly do they indulge themselves in injustice and partiality! For want of substance to procure right to partially: For want of substance to procure right to themselves the poor are ordinarily trampled on; but God is their guardian; and, let magistrates do their worst, he will at last redress the grievances of his poor ones. PSALM LXXXIII. Ver. 2. To hate the God of philosophical imagination may be deemed impossible; but to hate the God of truth, holiness, and grace, is the very constitution of every unrenewed heart. Ro. 8. 7. C.
REFLECTIONS.—To quicken his people's importunity in prayer the Lord sometimes appears for a time to discovered their distract. Whatever preferces men to disregard their distress. Whatever pretences men make for their opposition to God's people, the real cause is their enmity against God himself, whose holiness they cannot endure, and whose image they cannot but hate. But while saints are hid with Christ in God, no enemy can really hurt them. Wicked men, though

Past obligations are sufficient to engage our hearts, even though we had no future promises in view. And when God grants himself and his fulness, our desires or prayers for enjoyment can never be too much enlarged. They only who have him for their portion have all that heart can wish. But how terrible is the have all that heart can wish. But how terrible is the punishment of a wilful refusal of his gracious offers! What loss of victory over enemies, of perpetuated enjoyments, and of delightful provision! Alas! what enemies are sinners to their own souls! And they who resist God's Word and Spirit have only their own wilfulness to blame when their destruction comes. Their perishing is not through want of compassion in God, but through the hardness and impenitence of their own diversified by nations, humours, or interests, strongly unite in opposing the cause of God and truth. Glad would they be if neither preacher nor professor of the true religion were left upon earth. But though craft be employed to seduce, threatenings to intimidate, and fury to extirpate, the foundation of God standeth sure. God knoweth them that believe, and they shall never be moved. At the worst they have their all-sufficient Lord to flee to, who can check the madness of the devourers. And past interpositions of God in favour of his people should encourage us to plead and hope for the like mercy. All opposition to God and his church is but rushing headlong into certain ruin. Even in this life, sinners' terrors of mind often make their life a burden, and are a presage of more dreadful misery in hell for ever. Men must know at last that the Lord omnipotent reigneth; and the execution of deserved judgment on the ungodly but shows the tendency of sin. Meanwhile we ought to long for the conviction and conversion of our bitterest enemies of mankind, rather than their destruction.

Even when passing through the vale of misery—through sorrow and suffering and persecution—make it as a well (or fountain of delight), and the early rain falleth upon it, and covereth it with verdure. REFLECTIONS.—What inexpressible beauty gracious souls see in holiness and in holy work! Fellow-souls see in holiness and in holy work! ship with God in Christ, in his ordinances, is the de-light, the desire of their soul. The meanest abode, with his presence and ordinances, is preferred to a palace without them. Not only faithful ministers who attend to their work, but all who study a life of close fellowship with God, and faithful service of him, increase their joy in the Lord and their strength for his work. If our heart be once engaged we can walk with pleasure in God's ways, and in attending his REFLECTIONS. - Present distress should never obli-His pardons of sin, through active faith, are all free, full, and everlasting; and when guilt is removed wrath ceases of course. Though our unfaithfulness may have plunged us into distress, God is rich in mercy and ready to turn us to himself. But no salvation can be hoped for while we continue indulging our sins. And unless he save us freely, through faith in Christ, we are undone forever. Impenitent sinners must undergo F' LM LXXXIV. Ver. 3. Even is not in the Hebrew. The rds between yea and young should rather be taken as a parenthesis, and the meaning stands thus—'My heart cries out for the living God, for thine altars, O Lord of hosts,' &c. The longing of the psalms is for they are already mentioned and their strength to make their psalms is for they are already mentioned. The longing of the psalms is for they are already mentioned. from heaven beholds him with pleasure. While the gospel and its influences take place among men, JEHO-YAH manifests his righteousness in pardoning and blessing us with all spiritual blessings in Christ; in making us to abound in fruits of righteousness to the praise of his glory; and in directing us to Jesus and his law and example, that we may be led into the paths of everlasting peace.

PSALM LXXXVI. Ver. 2. I am holy. "Thy favoured one" (Mudge). "Thy gracious saint" (Ainsworth). But, however it may be translated, the confident assertion of the purity of his personal character, proves the speaker either to be a self-deceiving Pharisee, sporting a righteousness he did not possess, or 'jesus Christ the righteous,' the Holy One of Israel." The former he could not be, the latter therefore he must be. C.

REFLECTIONS.—While I here behold Jesus as the holy but sacrificial servant of his Father, im-

PSALM LXXXVII. Ver. 1. The chief object of this psalm is to show the advantages of religious ordinances and religious training. Especially the psalmist illustrates the great benefit of having been born and educated in the holy city, where God is honoured, and where the enlightening, restraining, and quickening influences of his worship are felt. P.—The Lord's foundation is Christ, 1 Co. 3, 70, upon whom are builded, first apostles and prophets, then the whole church, Ep. 2, 20; and this foundation rests upon the mountains, the high raised strength of the Redeemer's holiness, ver. 2. See Ps. 78. 68. C. Ver. 4. I will mention Egypt, Ps. 89, 10; Is. 51. 9, 10, whom I judged with many plagues, and whence I delivered my people at the first; and Babylon, which I have doomed to extirpation, because she led Zion captive. Behold, also, Philistia, whose persevering enmity I have foiled and punished; Tyre, that once great city, which I have left a desolate rock—with the whole land of Ethiopia (Cush), which I have swept with successive judgments—and all this I have done for my Zion's sake. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Behold how firmly and publicly our gospel church is founded upon Jesus Christ the Rock of ages! And how JEHOVAH delights in fellowship with his people in the public and private ordinances of his grace. Glorious things are spoken of her foundation has a constant and the public and private ordinances of her foundation has constant as a constant and the public and private ordinances of the public and private ordinances or ordinance tion, her ordinances, her members, her properties, her fulness. And if I wish to live ionger on earth, let my great end be to serve God's interests and to show forth his praise.

PSALM LXXXIX. Ver. 1. None but Messiah could confidently adopt the opening resolution and prophecy of this verse: of him, accordingly, it has been interpreted by Kabbi Solomon, amongst the Jews; and by Aben Ezra, amongst Jewish converts to Christianity. C.

Ver. 3. In this verse, the Father addresses the Son, whom he designates as 'David my servant:' David signifies beloved, the name given to the Son by the Father from heaven, Mat. 3. 17; and the apostolic name by which his justifying grace is commended to the church, Ep. 1. 6. And that it applies here, not to David the son of Jesse, but to David's Lord, will appear certain from considering ver. 4, which applies not to the desolated throne of David in Jerusalem, but to the abiding throne of Messiah in glory. C.

Ver. 5. The heavens shall praise thy wonders, O Lord. The comparison of this passage from verse 5-17, with He. 1. 10 and Ps. 102. 1, 25, will clearly demonstrate that it contains a continued address of the Father to the Son, delivered in prophecy for establishment of the faith of the ancient church. See Lu. 1, 30. C. Ver. 30. His children. The church is called Christ's children, He. 2. 13, and they are here warned against the terrible judgments upon the various forms of apostasy and infidel'. TAIRWAY TO TOWER OF CASTLE—NEAR THE PLACE WHERE CHRIST WAS TRANSFIGURED. [Psalms, lxxxix:12.]—"The North and the South thou hast created them: Tabor and Hermon shall rejoice in thy name." This is a view of the stairway to the tower of Subeibeh castle. It stands three miles from Cæsarea Philippi, and about one thousand feet higher than this town. It is in sight of Mount Hermon, where the Lord Jesus Christ was transfigured in the presence of Peter, James and John. We are looking toward the North. This castle figured largely in the wars of the Saracenes of Damascus against the Templars of Jerusalem. As it commands the passage from the Huleh to the plains of the Jordan over Hermon to Damascus and the East, it must have been a place of importance at least during those troublous times when such passes were dominated by a frowning castle.

and earth by the rolling tides; measuring out the months of the life of man, and the returns of God's solemn festivals; and 'ruling the night,' as a 'faithful witness in heaven,' that though the sun be withdrawn for a time, his beams are not extinguished. In all which respects, the moon is a beautiful emblem of the covenant grace of God. Some interpret it of the rainbow, but there is no necessity for such straining. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Glorious is that promise of grace which JEHOVAH has made in Jesus Christ as the Head and Representative of all believers. The mercy and faithfulness of God are therein for ever clearly and comfortably manifested; and for ever adored, both in heaven and earth. How infinite are the greatness and majesty of our loving God! How unbounded his strength! No unruly elements in nature, nor outrageous nations of men, can control it. His dominion extends to all parts and ends of the earth; and in a powerful, steady, judicious, righteous, and merciful manner, he conducts his whole providential work, but chiefly that of redemption through the blood of his Son. Happy are they who experimentally know the joyful sound of the gospel, proclaiming Jesus' victories over sin, Satan, the world, death, and hell; and pardon, peace, liberty, and eternal happiness through his blood to sinful men. They walk in the light of Jehovah's favour, direction, and joys! And gloriously are they justified, saved, strengthened, and honoured in Christ !- In these declarations of God to Samuel concerning David, let me contemplate how JEHOVAH found out and laid our help, our salvation, upon Jesus He it was that supported, strengthened, attended, honoured, and owned him. He it is that aids, favours, corrects, but blesses all believers.

—Behold too the sufferings of Jesus and his church, from Satan, from Jews, from heathens, from the wicked: and how terrible the Almighty's dis-pleasure! To be under it for ever constitutes hell. How short, how uncertain, are our days on earth! If through Jesus, as our risen life and quickening Head, we do not live to God's glory here, and with God in glory hereafter, our life is worse than in vain. But painful is it for exercised souls to want the sense But painful is it for exercised souls to want the sense of God's love, even though it be secured in the gracious promise. And grievous are the virulent reproaches of Christ, his Father, and his people, and hard to be borne by a tender saint.

PSALM XC. Title. This is one of the most remarkable, and, in some respects, one of the most beautiful, psalms in the whole book. It has been called the funeral hymn of the world. Human frailty is brought out in it with equal vividness and pathos; but it is brought out in such a way that it teaches man humble resignation rather than blank despair. It teaches the thoughtful man to utter in faith and hope the sublime prayer, 'Thy will be done,' for it shows him that God's will is the supreme good of the creature. It is called in the title a prayer of Moses; and Prof. Alexander has well said.— The correctness of the title is confirmed by its unique simplicity and grandeur; its appropriateness to his times and circumstances; its resemblance to the law in urging the connection between sin and death; its simplicity of diction akin to the poetical parts of the Pentateuch, without the slightest trace of imitation or quotation; its marked unlikeness to the psalms of David, and still more to those of later date; and finally the proved impossibility of assigning it to any other age or author.' P.

Ver. 1. In all generations. In the days of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in the slavery of Egypt, in the wanderings of the desert, in the wars with Philistia, &c., and even in the captivity and dispersion. Yea, still he is the refuge of his people, whenever their heart shall turn to the Lord. C.

Ver. 2. Return, ye children of men. That is, as some understand it, 'return to the dust from whence ye vere taken.' But is it not more natural to understand the word return of the 'return of the spirit to God who gave it;' or of the resurrection, in which the body of his children, though 'sown in dishonour, is raised in glory?' C.

Ver. 11. Power of thine anger. None, in this life, can fully estimate the awful torment of 'the worm that dieth not, and the fire that is not quenched.'—'Yet who regardeth the power of thine anger, or thy wrath with reverence becoming thee?' (Booth-rand).

Ver. 16. Thy work of creation—thy work of providence—thy work of grace. Of the first, the natural man seeth but little; of the second, less; of the third, nothing; for, spiritual things must be spiritually discerned; and the 'pure in heart,' those renewed by the Holy Spirit, 'shall (alone) see God.' C.

REFLECTIONS. - Happy are they who, amidst a transitory and perishing world, have the eternal God for their ALL IN ALL. Wise is his dominion over mankind and unsearchable his duration. But weak and short-lived are men. And it is madness to seek and short-lived are men. And it is madness to seek satisfaction and happiness in things so fleeting and unsubstantial. With what armies of sorrows hath sin invaded and overspread our earth: and how exactly every crime is observed by God, in order to correct or punish on account of it! But it is unavailing to live, or live long, unless we live to and in Christ. Yea, in the way which God has reserved for these tolerable is the woe which God has reserved for those who die in their sins. Every day, therefore, ought to be so numbered as to flee from them to Jesus Christ our The great business of life is to make ready for death. To ponder aright what is to become of us in eternity is wisdom indeed, and deserves the most serious application. Gracious souls cannot without sorrow abide the sense of God's displeasure. And they who have truly tasted the bitterness of sin cannot rest till the Lord return in pardoning mercy, speak peace to

TATIONS OF THE CROSS IN THE GARDEN. [Psalms, lxxxix:45.]—"The days of his youth hast thou shortened: thou hast covered him with shame." The Greek church, or the Eastern church, has placed within the Garden of Gethsemane little stations which represent the incidents of the crucifixion. Poor pilgrims from all parts of the world upon visiting Jerusalem make the rounds of these stations of the Cross, praying at each. One cannot stand in the Garden of Gethsemane during the Greek Easter week without having a new apprehension of the hold the Lord Jesus Christ has upon the hearts of the human race. To see people kissing the wood of which the stations representing the incidents of the crucifixion are built; to see them kissing the rocks made dear to their hearts because lying upon the ground over which the Lord Jesus Christ walked, is sufficient to bring tears to the eyes of the hardest heart.

11 Whor knoweth the power of thine anger? even according to thy fear, so is thy wrath.2

12 So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom.

13 Řeturn, O Lord, how long? and let it repent thee concerning thy servants.4

14 O' satisfy us early with thy mercy; that we may rejoice and be glad al! our days.

15 Make us glad according to the days wherein thou hast afflicted us, and the years wherein we have seen evil.

16 Let* thy work appear unto thy servants, and thy glory unto their children.

17 And let the beauty of the LORD our God be upon us: and restablish thou the work of our hands upon us; yea, the work of our hands establish thou it.5

PSALM XCII.

1 The prophet exhorteth to praise God, 4 for his great works, 6 for his judgments on the wicked, 10 and for his goodness to the godly.

A psalm or song for the sabbath day.

T is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lorn, and to sing praises unto thy name, O most High:

2 Tob show forth thy loving-kindness in the morning, and thy faithfulness every night,1

3 Upon an instrument of ten strings, and upon the psaltery; 2upon the harp with a solemn sound.3

4 For thou, Lord, that made me glad through thy work: 4 I will triumph in the works of thy hands.

5 O LORD, how great are thy works! and thy thoughts are very deep.

6 Ag brutish man knoweth not; neither doth a fool hunderstand this.

7 When the wicked spring as the grass, and when all the workers of iniquity do flourish; it is that they shall be idestroyed for ever:

8 But thou, LORD, art *most high for evermore.

9 For, lo, thine enemies, O LORD, for, lo, thine enemies shall perish; all the workers of iniquity shall be scattered.

their conscience, and enable them to rejoice in himself. And such as are faithful to Christ will be greatly con-cerned that he may work all in them, do all for them, give all to them; and that he may herein be glorified, not only in them, but also in their posterity after them.

not only in them, but also in their posterity after them.

PSALM XCI. Ver. 1. Secret stace. In the bosom of the Father, where the Son was in glory 'before the foundation of the world'—our only conception of eternity (see Jn. 1. 18; and 17. 5; I Jn. x. 2); for he that was before creation was, must have been eternal. C.

Ver. 2. I will say. That the speaker is Christ, his own tacit acknowledgment (Mat. 4.6, compared with ver. 11, 12) undeniably demonstrates. The amended translation of L. with, instead of 'I will say,' gives 'who saith,' which seems more natural. C.

Ver. 4. The wings and feathers which God adopted in the emblematic cherubin that overshadowed the mercy-seat for our sins. C.

Ver. 9. The Lord which is my repuge. By supplying the words which is, the sense is obscured. 'The Lord my refuge,' like 'the Lord our righteousness,' should be taken as a title of Jehovah, appropriating the God and Fathers of our Lord Jesus Christ, as his refuge: and, through him, the refuge of every believer in his name. C

Ver. 11. Satan quoted this text correctly, so far as he went; and, so far, our Lord acknowledged the interpretation. But yet he quoted falsely, because he quoted imperfectly, and mis-represented the truth, as he suppressed an essential part. And 60, in all ages, have all his servants dealt. C.

REFLECTIONS.—While I here contemplate Jesus Christ as the Father's Son, protecting, guarded, attended, heard in his prayers, honoured, and crowned with life and glory everlasting, let me with wonder behold the happiness of all people who make God their refuge and delightful habitation, who know his name, set their love on him, and call on him. Secured against every disappointment and danger, distinguished in the providence of God, guarded by angels, delivered from and victorious over the devil, that fowler, dragon, and lion of hell, JEHOVAH attends them in their troubles, hears their prayers, and gives them answers of peace. He exalts them on Christ their Rock, and makes them to sit with him on his throne; honours them with the relations of children, kings, and priests unto God, and decks them with blessed righteousness and imparted grace. And after preserving all who believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, he bestows upon them his unutterable blessedness above. May these things in Christ be the desire of my heart.

PSALM XCII. Ver. 3. Of the several musical instruments here enumerated, there is little, if any, certain knowledge. Nor is their specific nature important; as the object of the speaker is merely to show, that all instruments of music should be dedicated to the praise of God—to show forth his 'loving-kindness' in 'the morning,' because he has preserved his children while they slept—and his 'faithfulness every night,' because he has given them 'tread' through the day. C.

Ver. 12. Like the paim-tree—lofty and fruitful, Like the 11048 cedar—great and incorruptible. These characters meet in one, but are from him transfused to many. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Whatever our engagements be, we are bound at least to begin and end every day with prayer and praise. And they who have lively experience of God's love and faithfulness, will delight in daily showing forth his salvation. None but such as are ignorant or wicked will disregard his work of creation or providence; and much less that of redemption-but short-lived is the flourishing of wicked men, and dread-ful the misery in which it issues; and yet this misery is the legitimate outcome of sin against God! pleasant and profitable to themselves and others, and honourable to God, shall be the spiritual growth of those who are planted in Christ, and live in con-tinued fellowship with him.

PSALM XCIII. Ver. 1. The Lord reigneth. The prophetic period to which this and some parallel psalms refer can be easily ascertained from comparing them with Re. 11. 17; 19. 6; at which time God shall 'take to him his mighty power and reign,' and when all the things that are now temporary and movable shall pass under that 'kingdom that cannot be moved,' He. 12. 28. C.

- 10 But" my horn shalt thou exalt like the horn of an unicorn: 5 I oshall be anointed with fresh oil.
- 11 Mine eye also shall see my desire on mine enemies; and mine ears shall hear my desire of the wicked that rise up against me.6

12 Theq righteous shall flourish like the palmtree; he shall grow like a cedar in Lebanon.

13 Those that 'be planted' in the house of the LORD shall flourish in the courts of our God.

14 They's shall still bring forth fruit in old age; they shall be fat and flourishing;8

15 To show that the LORD is upright; he is my rock, and there is no unrighteousness in him.

PSALM XCIII.

PSALM XCV.

1 An exhortation to praise God for his greatness, 6 and for his goodness, 8 and not to tempt him as did Israel in the wilderness.

COME, elet us sing unto the LORD; let us make a joyful noise to the Bock of our salvation.

2 Let us come before his presence¹ with thanksgiving, and make a joyful noise unto him with psalms.

disquiet those who have Christ, the Lord of all, to be their Father and portion. No troubles need dismay those who are by grace made one with the King eternal. No changes need discontent them who have God's sure testimonies for their heritage and the ground of their hope. None need be ashamed of holiness, which is the ornament of God's nature, of his renewed hearts, his church, and his heaven.

PSALM XCIV. Ver. x. The infliction of punishment is essential to the character of justice in God, both as a corrective of the wicked, and a warning to the godly. It is in vain, then, for foolish men to quarrel with this appeal to him who hath said — 'Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves;' but, at the same time, has added—'Vengeance is mine,—I will repay, saith the Lord.' C.

Ver. 6. Every period of the persecutions of the Christian church

Ver. 6. Every period of the persecutions of the Christian church has fully and literally realized this description. But such, alas! increnewed human nature, ever prone, in its fatal selfishness, to assail the defenceless, and. in its blinded ignorance, to conclude that God will neither see, regard, nor requite! C.

Ver. 15. Judgment shall return unto righteourness. That is, the judgment of God which the Jews imprecated, and which now has left them to harden in their sins, will return and lead them through their afflictions, to the righteourness of faith, when they shall look upon him whom they pierced, and follow on to know the Lord. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Saints must always expect manifold injuries and oppressions in this world. But never must they usurp God's prerogative in avenging themselves but rectionally endure and wait for the day when selves, but patiently endure and wait for the day when he that judges righteously shall arise to judge their adversaries. When men leaving God are left to themselves, how their heart, hands, and tongue concur in abusing him and his people! Astonishing is their atheism and stupidity! They sink even below common sense. But God makes the correction of his people to issue in their instruction, and in their spiritual or eternal rest and safety, while hardened sinners are ruined. In due time he will rectify all seeming discrete and the right anguste of his indements shall be orders; and the righteousness of his judgments shall be made clearly manifest to the encouragement of the upright to follow him, and to praise him for his provi-dences. And thrice happy are they who have treasured up manifold experiences of God's support, comfort, and deliverance in their times of extreme distress! encourage them to expect the proper, seasonable, and righteous overthrow of opposition to the church, whether wicked courts in Israel, Assyrians, Chaldeans, Syro-Grecians, obstinate Jews, Romish heathens, antichristians, or others.

ment of worship by many churches sadly neglected, or most imperfectly attempted—and a duty and privilege to which many professing Christians consider themselves in no wise obligated. In addition, however, to this, and similar calls of the Spirit, the example of Christ on earth, and of saints in heaven, demands the universal voice of the church to engage in the praises of Jeho-Val. Yer. 3. The heathen worshipped false gods; the Jews also were addicted to idolatry. One great object of this noble song of praise is to celebrate the praises of the one only exalted God of heaven and earth. He is called by his peculiar and incommunicable name JEHOVAH. By it he made himself known to Moses and the whole Jewish nation. By it he was distinguished from all false deities. Hence in this verse the psalmist says:—'For JEHOVAH is a great God, and a great King over all gods.' P.

Reflections. - God richly deserves our highest REFLECTIONS.—God richly deserves our highest and most cordial praise. And we should invite one another to this blessed employ. How great is he, possessed of every necessary, infinite, and eternal excellency! How glorious his formation of all things, and his extensive dominion over them! How delightful and effective of blessings unnumbered is his new-covenant relation to men!—But if he be our Saviour and King, it is proper it is preserve, that we had beginnt King, it is proper, it is necessary, that we be obedient subjects.

To none but such is he the author of eternal salvation.

To-day, without a moment's delay, we ought to hear his voice in the gospel, and to receive the offers of his grace. However slightly men pass over their sins, they are highly provoking in God's sight. And disbelief of his promises is one of the greatest insults that we can put upon him. That heart is hardened indeed when the great and president and the state of the greatest and th ened indeed whom the great and precious promises of the gospel cannot effect. Let us take warning by the ruin of others, that we fall not after the same example of Though God bear long with us, he will not bear always. The mercies which we have received from him, as well as the wilfulness of our ignorance and our love to our errors, will fearfully aggravate our sin. And dreadful will be our case, if because of our sins he once exclude us from his new kingdom, his celestial rest, on account of our despising it when offered to us in the gospel.

PSALM XCVI. REFLECTIONS.—Since to us Gentiles Jesus Christ and his word of salvation are now come, let us, in songs ever fresh, ever cordial, publish the glories of his grace, and the wonders of his redeeming mercy, power, holiness, and majesty. Let us acknowledge him as our saving Lord, present ourselves to him as living sacrifices, and in the pure ordinances of his grace worship him with pure hearts and in a reverent and holy manner. Let us rejoice that his kingdom has been, is, and will be established among the Gentiles on earth. Let us, with joy, hope for these latter days, in which Satan shall be bound, and sail the kingdom or another thin and the bound, and all the kingdoms on earth subjected to the righteous and merciful government of our Redeemer. And let us, with more exalted joy, expect his coming in the clouds, with power and great glory, to judge, and finally decide the eternal state of men and angels.

PSALM XCVII. Ver. 2. Clouds and darkness are the emblems of both his government of providence and plan of redemption, which are yet veiled from our eyes—in some parts by clouds, through which we see obscurely; and in others by darkness, through which we cannot see at all. C. Ver. 7. Confounded. This is not any angry imprecation, but a humble prayer that God would confound the counsels of idolaters against truth and godliness. as he confounded the counsel of Ahithophel against David—that he would confound their com-binations to do evil in the world, as he confounded the tongues of the Babel conspirators, and scattered them abroad upon the face of the whole earth. C.

REFLECTIONS.—However mysterious and unsearch-REFLECTIONS.—However mysterious and unsearchable God's providences be, they are always just and equal. A great shaking of the nations, by the Roman and other conquests, ushered in the gospel kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. A great destruction of obstinate Jews and heathens, and overturning of idolatry in the world, attended the erection and spread of it. And a great overturning of antichristians, Mahometans, and all their false worship, shall yet take place in its most glorious period. No exalted potentates, no mighty nations, nor fixed cusyet take place in its most glorious period. No exalted potentates, no mighty nations, nor fixed customs of wickedness, shall be able to withstand his conquering influence. Let saints then rejoice in his dignity of person, office, and state; in his gracious preservation and deliverance of his people; in the comforts and glory which he has prepared for them; and in his righteous judgments upon their implacable foes.

And let their delight in his holiness inflame their love to himself and their hatred of sin.

PSALM XCVIII. Ver. 3. Ends—countries of the world, evidently carrying forward to the period foretold by our Lord, Mat. 24. 14. C.

Ver. 6. See note on Ps. 92. 3. But these instruments are now, almost without exception, dedicated to military pomp, theatrical spectacles, bacchanalian revellings, and worldly amusements; and, married to a sensual and degrading poetry, whereby they become the great auxiliaries of the world against God—and are by many held inconsistent with the simplicity and purity of Christian worship. C.

REFLECTIONS.—While I review these lotty notes,

PRISON, NAPLES. [Psalms, xcvi:10.]—"Say among the heathen that the Lord reigneth; the world also shall be established that it shall not be moved; he shall judge the people rightcously." Perhaps there is no city on earth that furnishes a better point for the study of the judgments of God upon cities, nations, and individuals, than Naples. In no other city that has ever existed, have men gone further in defiance of the laws of God and man, and in no other city have they suffered more.

Here, in the time of Rome's power and glory, her wealthy people reveled in vices too horrible to mention. And here the judgments of heaven have fallen with a fury and an emphasis almost without parallel. This region, so amply favored as one might be led to suppose it dropped from heaven, as the poet says, has done more to insult heaven than almost any other spot. But Naples has been judged, and here the Lord reigns, either to build those who obey or to destroy those who violate His law.

Because Ps. xcvii. addressed a people that loved the Lord (ver. 10., a people made righteous by faith in a Saviour; but Ps. xcix. addresses a people who had 'sought out many inventions,' ver. 8, upon which, even a God of mercy takes, for the correction and ensample of others, severe and righteous indement. But he will make the dearest of them to smart severely for their sin in this life, notwithstanding they may triumph through faith. Great praise is due to God for his mercies. And deep awe and inward purity are necessary in worshipping him that is infinitely holy.

PSALM C. Ver. x. That this summons is not confined to 'the land of Judea' is obvious from ver. 4, in which the parties called are exhorted to enter Jehovah's courts. For, whereas the temple had within the gates an outward court, into which the Gentiles might freely enter—the converted Gentiles must here be united as 'God's sheep and people' with the believing Jews. See Jn. 20. 16: 1s. 19. 25. C.

REFLECTIONS.—What joyful praise, what grateful thanksgiving, what cheerful and hearty service do we Gentiles owe to the Lord!—to him who is Luco.

we Gentiles owe to the Lord!—to him who is JEHO-YAH, the infinite ALL!—to him who forms us both in AAH, the infinite ALL:—to him who forms us both in mature and in grace!—to him who is our high proprietor and redeemer, our kind shepherd, leader, provider, and provision!—to him who is good in himself, and whose mercy and truth are for ever exerted in the fulfillment of gracious and ever-blessed promises to PSALM CI. Ver. 2. In a perfect way . . . with a perfect heart. Surely he that so resolves, if he do it not in self-ignorance, as Peter resolved never to forsake his Master, must be the Christ. C.—This is a noble resolution, well worthy of 'the man after God's own heart.' Wisdom, divine wisdom, should guide him in everything. His principles and motives would be wise; his conduct and acts in all the relations of life, private as well as public, would be regulated by wisdom; his words and his very thoughts would be wise; his companions and friends would be selected wisely. In the verses which follow, the psalmist shows how he was resolved to carry out his noble resolution. What a lesson does this psalm teach us! P_{\bullet}

REFLECTIONS. - The lot of saints on earth is strange mixture of mercies and judgments. But all of them, taken in their connection and tendency, are to be improved as matter of praise and thanksgiving. Fellowship with and influences from God must strengthen and animate us to every holy practice. Serious godliness is the most substantial wisdom; and to act for God in the religious management of families, kingdoms, or in other relative stations, is a noted branch of it. With the utmost care ought men, by whatever power they have, to discourage everything wicked, and to encourage everything virtuous and holy. But it is in vain to attempt instructing or reforming others if we do not set them an example in our own practice.

PSALM CII. Ver. 6, 7. What three birds are specifically intended it is impossible with certainty to say: two of them are, however, inhabitants of the deserts, far from the 'aunts of men; and one, though the inhabitant of cities, a solitary vatcher on house-tops. The different habits of these birds formed admirable emblems of that solitary state into which our Lord was often forced in order to clude the watchful and incessant malice of his enemies. C.

Ver. 12. This address exactly corresponds with its continuation in ver. 25; and as there is apostolic authority for considering ver. 25 to be words of the Father to the Son, there can be no doubt that ver. 12 is the address of the Father likewise. C.

Ver. 12. Would not history rather prove that the time to punish Zion had come at the period of our Lord's prayer of distress?

Not so. 'Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth.' And though her salvation seem to linger in the eye of sense, it was then secured to the heart of faith; and all that now grows in the field of promise, shall be reaped in the harvest of vision. C. Ver. 23. In this, s. d the first clause of ver. 24, the Son, in the days of his flesh, resumes his address to the Father. The reply of the Father, as quoted by the apostle, He. 1. 10, is one amongst the many and overwhelming evidences of the Godhead of the Son. In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth, Ge. 1. 1. But the Father being witness, the Son created the heavens and the earth; therefore—hear it, ye gainsayers, and be silent for ever—therefore the Son is God. C.

REFLECTIONS.—To what low condition God reduces his church and people for the exercise and trial of their grace, and for exciting their more importunate prayers. In darkness, vexation, and trouble, their days often post toward an end. Afflicted, dispirited, and pained in their heart, and their body wasted to skin and bones, like owls and pelicans, they shun converse and comfort and pring areas in malestable affined and comfort, and pine away in melancholy solitude. Often, like lonely sparrows, they are debarred from rest and sleep, and are deserted by friends, or avoid their company: are exposed to the reproach and fury of inverted erate enemies—oppressed with grief—overwhelmed with a sense of God's indignation, in his sudden and awful changing of their comforts into depths of misery, great is the mercy that they have, notwithstanding, a God, a hearer of prayer, to whom they may complain; and a heart to pour out before him. Be the afflictions of the righteous as numerous as they will, the eternal complains has and does and does are they will, the eternal complexity has and does and does are they will the ternal complexity. Saviour has, and does, and will deliver them out of PSALM CIV.

1 A meditation upon the mighty power, 7 and wonderful providence of God. 31 God's glory is eternal. 33 The prophet voweth perpetually to praise God.

LESS the LORD, O my soul. O LORD D my God, bthou art very great; thou art clothed with honour and majesty: 2 Who coverest thyself awith light as with a garment; "who stretchest out the heavens like 3 Whog layeth the beams of his chambers in the waters; hwho maketh the clouds his chariot;

who walketh upon the wings of the wind; 4 Who maketh his angels spirits, his ministers a flaming fire;1

5 Who laid the foundations of the 2earth, that it should not be removed for ever.

6 Thouk coveredst it with the deep as with a garment: the waters stood above the mountains. 7 Atl thy rebuke they fled; at the voice of thy thunder they hasted away.

8 They go up by the mountains; they go down by the valleys unto the place which thou hast founded for them.

9 Thoun hast set a bound that they may not pass over; that they turn not again to cover the 11 They give drink to every beast of the field: the wild asses quench their thirst.

13 Heq watereth the hills from his chambers;1 the earth is satisfied with the fruit of thy works.2

14 Her causeth the grass to grow for the cattle, and herb for the service of man; that he may bring forth food out of the earth,

15 And wine that maketh glad the heart of man, and oil to make his face to shine,3 and bread which strengtheneth man's heart.

16 The trees of the Lord are full of sap; the cedars of Lebanon, which he hath planted; them all. He has fixed the periods of his church's deliverance, and issued forth promises ascertaining the same. While with deep concern his servants are same. While with deep concern his servants are affected with her ruinous case, and pour forth their importunate prayers, he will flee to her relief, to the conversion of multitudes and the terror of obstinate opposers. What he did in former times, in delivering from Babylon, in erecting the New Testament church, and in destroying her Jewish and heathen persecutors, encourages us to hope for more glorious deliverances from Antichrist, and at last from the world that lieth in wickedness. And whatever distresses befall the faithful in their way to the heavenly mansions, Jesus' eternity secures the power and stability of his church, and of all who believe in Christ.

17 Where the birds make their nests: as for the stork, "the fir-trees are her house."

18 The high hills are a refuge for the wild goats, and the rocks for the conies.

PSALM CIII. Ver. 2. Forget not all his benefits. A large portion of 'childhood and youth' are truly 'vanity' are spent in much ignorance of God, and pass into forgetfulness of his mercies. He whose eye saw, and whose memory records, 'all the mercies' of Jehovah, can be no other than the all-perfect Son of God. C. Ver. 5. Like the eagle's. This is no mere adoption of a popular opinion about the eagle's moulting in old age; nor any mere poetical ornament, which would be utterly inconsistent with simple and unchanging truth. Does not the entire difficulty arise from departing from the literal translation and natural position of the original? Literally translated and placed, the passage would read thus:— shall be renewed (not as an eagle's, but) as an eagle, thy youth.' That is, thy youthful strength, Is. 40. 31, shall be renewed; and, as an eagle spurns the earth, soars above the clouds, and hides him in the sunbeams; so, on wings of heavenly devotion, thou shalt mount, and, while yet on earth, establish thy conversation in heaven. C.

Ver. 14. From ver. 10, the true 'children of Israel' make full acknowledgment of the preceding character of God, and especially in the total removal of their sins (ver. 12,, effected by the blood of the Lamb. The east and west can never meet, no more can the justified believer again encounter his sins. The waters of mercy have passed over them, and their remembrance is gone for ever. C.

Ver. 17. Righteousness here signifies that just, good, and gracious way in which he deals with all those that are his true children. He deals justly with them in Christ their Saviour, counting them justified by his blood; he manifests his goodness to them in providing for all their wants, preserving them amid all dangers.

PSALM CV.

1 An exhortation to praise God, and to seek out his works. 8 Hte providence over Abraham, 16 over Joseph, 23 over Israel in Egypt, 26 over Moses delivering the Israelites, 37 over the Israelites brought out of Egypt, fed in the wilderness, and planted in Canaan.

GIVE thanks unto the Lord; call upon , his name; make known his deeds among the people.

- 2 Singe unto him, sing psalms unto him; talk ye of all his wondrous works.
- 3 Gloryd ye in his holy name: elet the heart of them rejoice that seek the LORD.
- 4 Seek i the Lord, and his strength; seek his face evermore.
- 5 Remember^h his marvellous works that he hath done; his wonders, and the judgments of
- 6 O' ye seed of Abraham his servant, ye children of Jacob his chosen.
- 7 He is the Lord our God: his judgments are in all the earth.
- 8 He¹ hath remembered his covenant for ever, the word which he commanded to a thousand generations:
- 9 Which covenant he made with Abraham, and his oath unto Isaac;
- 10 And confirmed the same unto Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant;
- 11 Saying, 'Unto thee will I give the land of Canaan, the lot5 of your inheritance:
- 12 When they were but va few men in number; yea, very few, and estrangers in it.
- 13 When they went from one nation to another, from one kingdom to another people,
- 14 Hes suffered no man to do them wrong; yea, he reproved kings for their sakes;
- 15 Saying, 'Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm.6

enabling them to overcome all temptations; he deals graciously in showering down spiritual mercies, fulfilling to them promises, and cherishing them with bright and glorious hopes. P. Ver. 18. Covenant. This is not that covenant of works which saith, 'Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things written in the book of the law, to do them;' but that covenant of grace, recorded by Paul, He. 8. 8-12, wherein the cleaning of the believer lies in the Redeemer's blood, 1 Jn. 1. 7, and his completeness and acceptance in the Redeemer's righteousness, Col. 2. 10; Ep. 1. 6. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Our hearts need to be much encouraged and excited, even to the most proper and most delightful exercises. And in dealing with God holly engaged. But how our hearts ought to be wholly engaged. But how shameful is it that we ever forget, that we so early forget, his mercies!—his mercies so great, so necessary, so numerous, so connected, so everlasting!—his unbounded compassion to us who are so mean, so frail, so polluted!—his free, full, and everlasting pardons should humble our hearts, and animate us to holy fear, love, and obedience. And while all his creatures in heaven and earth concur to bless and serve him, surely we, above all, whom Christ hath redeemed by his blood, should never be silent, never be slothful!

PSALM CIV. Ver. t. Thou art very great. The greatness of God in power can be estimated only by his works. Accordingly, the Spirit, by Christ, as the prophet of the church, here catalogues, as it were, and expounds some of the most remarkable and intelligible departments, whereby man may learn his own comparative weakness, nay, nothingness, and humble himself beneath the mighty power of God. C.

Ver. 5. Not removed for ever. This is not contradicted by what is declared, He. 1. 10-12; for, in point of fact, it is completely demonstrable by mathematical evidence, that the 'foundations of the earth, and of the whole planetary system, are calculated to abide for ever, unless he that laid them be pleased again to overturn them, and make all things new. Both these views are in strict accordance with the assertion in this verse. C.

Ver. 7. Voice of thy thunder. Modern discovery is daily bringing to light more of the power of electricity in the works of creation; and though we do not affirm with some that the Scriptures contain a system of natural philosophy, yet it is satisfactory to the believer who may live within the polluted atmosphere of infidelity, to learn that no progress of philosophical discovery has ever detected a single philosophical error in the Bible. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Great is the glory, the awful majesty, the infinite goodness, and mercy of our God! In what bright abodes of light is he enthroned! While clouds and winds convey the influences of his power, angelic hosts, made by himself, surround his seat, and bear his messages. Established earth and bounded bear nis messages. Established selow, rains from above, fruitful fields, and towering trees, nestling birds, shining luminaries, changing seasons, ravenous animals, shining luminaries, changing seasons, ravenous animals, swarming fishes and their spacious sea, and labouring man, his Maker's image, all preserved, all maintained, all governed by his power, his kindness, and his care, owe their whole selves and service to this mighty Lord Can he then, who hangs a whole creation on his arm, Can he then, who hangs a whole creation on his arm, and feeds them at his board, overlook a ransomed child, or let him starve! While he with pleasure upholds all, governs all, and rejoices in all his works, let my soul, touched by his grace, meditate and praise: and while obstinate sinners turn away from him and find themselves ruined, let my hosannas and hallelujahs ascend to him that loved me and gave himself for me.

PSALM CV. Ver. 16. Human skill and industry are instruments of abundance; and to cultivate and exercise them, a bounden duty—yet abundance is not attainable, nor famine avoidable, by their utmost exertion: every comfort, every blessing, is of God that showeth mercy. C. Ver. 44. It has been customary for infidels to charge this as an act of injustice against the God of Israel. But how little do they consider, that even a human superior is universally held entitled to remove a wicked and dishonest occupant, who refuses to render his stipulated return. How much more had God a right to drive out the most wicked of all nations, who not only refused to acknowledge their righteous Lord paramount, but who worshipped devils, while they hated him? C.

REFLECTIONS.—How infinitely excellent is this God, who deserves such gratitude, such praise, such search, such confidence! Marvellous is his blessed relation to us, and tender mercies towards us: and thrice happy are they who have him their own and their fathers' God! Happy are they who know the judgments of his mouth, his word, and live thereby; and for whose welfare the judgments of his hand are executed in all the earth! From mean appearances God's great manifestations of himself take their rise. But great is the care he takes of his people in this world, where they are but few, and strangers. that touches them touches the apple of his eye. that touches them touches the appie of his eye. And apparent difficulties easily vanish before the power of a promising God. But how mysterious are his ways of providence! When things seem most against us, And they are often strongly working for our good. Even calumnies and sufferings are made to try and prepare men for and advance them to honour. His church shall never want a friend in time of need. He can raise them up protectors where they least expect to find favour. And if God advance us, our duty is to discern his hand, and to adorn our station, by making discern his hand, and to adorn our station, by making it subservient to his glory. No danger or difficulty must deter us when his work is to be done.—All creatures concur in executing God's will of judgment or mercy. His protection, deliverance, and care of his people are wonderfully connected with the most fearful plagues and ruin of the wicked. And through trials unnumbered and of lang continuous Code. trials unnumbered, and of long continuance, God's

PSALM CVI. REFLECTIONS.-Wonderful and thank-worthy are all the deeds, the gracious deeds, of our God. Blessed are they who make his word their rule, and his compassion the ground of their acceptance, and the example of their holy practice! Happy are they who enjoy intimate fellowship with him in his follow another in adding sin to sin. We need not upbraid the sinners who went before us, as we are involved in the same fearful crimes. Notwithstanding both mercies and judgments, how stupidly insensible how strangely forgetful, how discontented with God's marvellous provision, how rebellious against his deputies and government-what distinguished idolaters, murmurers, infidels, adulterers, and how perversely disobedient—does sin make God's professed people! saving works and benefits. But how horrid is sin, which seeks to trample him, and all his kindness, under foot!

And awful is the reflection, that one generation should have any among them who, by their prayers and their zeal, stand in the gap, and avert the Lord's indignation. With pleasure he looks upon such, and highly honours there on that account. But infinite is the goodness of our God, who, when provoked to add one stroke to another, and to make wicked tempters to sin cruel tormentors for it, is so ready to step in for our relief, and to rebuke, or even turn the hearts of them that destroyed us. Never is a penitent prayer poured out into his bosom but it returns in gracious preserva-tion and deliverance. Let then all our troubles drive us to the throne of grace; and all our mercies, bestowed

PSALM CVII. Ver. 3. There is no characteristic mark by which the speaker can be identified; but from ver. 3, 16, compared with 1s, 45, 2, it appears to have been written after the return from the Babylonish captivity. South, in the Hebrew, signifies sea, which evidently points to the Persian Gulf, lying south of Babylon. C. Ver. 4. This cannot refer to the first wandering in the wilderness; for then the people were all gathered out of one land; on the return from Babylon, out of the many provinces of a vast empire. C.

ness; for then the people were all gathered out of one land; on the return from Babylon, out of the many provinces of a vast empire. C.

Ver. 11. This verse develops most of the causes of national calamities; and whilst the wise men of the world are ascribing them to every cause but the true one, it traces them at once to resellion against the words and contempt of the counsels of God. C.

Ver. 14. By comparing this verse with Mat. 4. 15, 16, where a similar description is applied to the rising of the light of Jesus, 'the Sun of Righteousness,' upon the earth, the psalm will be found, under natural embiems, to veil spiritual realities. C.

Ver. 24. Not even the earthquake is so terrible an example of the divine power, or emblem of the divine wrath, as the sea-storm; the earthquake soon passes over, and is generally confined to a few spots of an island or continent: but the sea-storm continues unabated or increasing for days, and rages over the vast expanse of an ocean, dispersing navies as the light foam upon its waves, and swallowing into its deep recesses the collected riches of distant lands. Yet this terrible storm is the Lord's voice to his children; and, when all other help is vain, 'they cry unto him, and he bringeth them out of their distresses.' Ah! Britain! Britain! remember the sailor boy! he is the trustee of all thy wealth, the right arm of all thy power. Instruct him when on land—save him from the misguidance of his sown untutored simplicity; and follow him with thy prayers amid the perils of the great deep; so shall he return to bless thee in the calm of his 'desired haven.' C.

Ver. 33. Rivers. 'Well-watered ground. That such terrible changes have frequently taken place, by the operation of natural causes, geological observation abundantly testifies. Moral causes also operating upon the peace, security, and industry of a country, have often produced similar effects. Both causes, however, are alike the judgments of God, intended to teach man his dependence, and humble him before his Maker. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Behold the effects of sin in forms unnumbered! in wanderings, in imprisonments, sickness, storms, barrenness, poverty, &c. Behold also the power of effectual fervent prayer!—it brings speedy relief in every case. The holiness and equity, the goodness, mercy, and tenderness of God, are connectedly displayed in his providence to men. With exact and humble care ought we then to consider the doing of the Lord, and to compare it with his word, and with our prayers, and one part of it with another; so shall we understand the loving-kindness of the Lord. And, were we accurate observers of providence, constantly would our heart, our lips, and life, be filled with the high praises of his kindness, and of his wonderful works towards the children of men.

PSALM CVIII. REFLECTIONS .- Quickly God can change the lot, can change the frames, and change the songs of his people; and put high praises in the room of bitter wailings. How confidently them may saints expect to see the salvation of God! What he has promised faith can rejoice in as if already per-formed: and whatever difficulties be in the way, nothing is too hard for the Lord enemies, if they are true, they shall prove more than conquerors through him that loveth them.

PSALM CIX. Ver. 6. This is one of those psalms against which, like its subject, the wicked infidel, and the uninstructed believer, have unhappilly concurred to 'open their mouth.' To evade the imaginary impropriety of its heavy curses, some have imagined ver. 6-17 to be uttered by David's enemies. But how come they, in so imagining, to overlook Ac. 1. 16-20, where Judas, and not David, is declared to be its prophetical object? C. Ver. 8. To vindicate these curses, for they are literally such, will be easy, before those who read and believe, and tremble as they read, De. 27. 15-26, and who fully comprehending Ga. 3. 10, do acknowledge and feel that 'Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things that are written in the book of the law to do them.' C.

Ver. 14. Most probably the sin of early training Judas up to the love of money, pilfering, and malignant cursing, and, so far from repenting of this perverted education, or seeing its biace fruits, only gnawing her spirit with grief at its want of a successful issue. C.

Ver. 22. Poor and needy. On comparing these epithets with Ps. 40. 17, and remembering that He. 10. 5 proves Ps. xl. to be descriptive of Christ, no doubt can reasonably remain that, in this, he is the speaker likewise. C.

Ver. 23. The shiftings and currents of the wind toss the dense swarms of locusts in a very extraordinary manner. Even so was our Lord tossed up and down—at one time borne over palm-leaves and garments, and hailed with loud hosannas! -at another followed with deepest execrations—Away with him; away with him! Crucify him; Cr.

Ver. 30. The comparison of this verse with Ps. 18. 40 and Ro. 15. 9. affords another unquestionable parallel proof that he who speaks in the first person is Christ. C.

REFLECTIONS.-Dreadful must be the nature of sin, However strong their which makes men so desperate and outrageous enemies

- 2 Awake, psaltery and harp; I myself will awake early.
- 3 I awill praise thee, O Loxo, among the people; and I will sing praises unto thee among the nations.
- 4 For thy mercy is great above the heavens; and thy truth reacheth unto the clouds.3
- 5 Beg thou exalted, O God, above the heavens, and thy glory above all the earth;4
- 6 Thath thy beloved may be delivered: save with thy right hand, and answer me.
- 7 God' hath spoken in his holiness; I will rejoice, I will kdivide Shechem, and mete out the valley of ¹Succoth.

PSALM CIX.

1 David, complaining of his slanderous enemies, under the person of Judas, devoteth them. 16 He showeth their sin. 21 Complaining of his own misery, he prayeth for help. 30 He promiseth thankfulness. To the chief musician, A psalm of David.

- 14 Let the iniquity of his fathers be remem. bered with the LORD; and let not the sin of his mother be blotted out.

PSALM CX. Ver. 1. The prophetic references in this psalm 1059 to the person, work, and kingdom of our Lord are placed beyond all doubt by the frequent quotations from it in the New Testament. Our Lord himself appropriates the words of the first verse, Mat. 22. 44; Mar. 12. 36; and Lu. 20. 42. They are so iterpreted by Peter in Ac. 2. 34. In He. 5. 6, Paul applies the words of ver. 4 to Christ; so also in He. 7. 17-21. It is clear from these quotations that the Messianic interpretation of the psalm was universal among the Jews in ancient times. Presented REFLECTIONS.—How high is the dignity of our Redeemer! Glorious is his reward for his work of obedience and suffering. And all his enemies—sin, Satan, the world, and death—are made to bow under his feet.

The everlasting gospel, sent forth into all the world, becomes powerful to men's salvation, and his kingdom is established, in despite of all opposition. Multitudes of his enemies surrender in the day of his power, cheerfully enlist themselves in his service, and worship him in the beauties of holiness. In the morning of the gospel period, through the heavenly influence of the blessed Spirit, multitudes, fresh and flourishing in heart, surrendered themselves to this Laurendered themselves to this Laurendered themselves to the surrendered themselves the surrendered the surrendered themselves the surrendered the surrendered themselves the surrendered themselves the surrendered themselves the surrendered the surrendered themselves the surrendered themselves the surrendered the surrendered the surrendered the surrendere heart, surrendered themselves to this Lord. PSALM CXI. Ver. 1. On comparing this ver. with Ps. 18. 49, explained by Ro. 15. 9, there can be no question that both are the words of Christ. But were this proof wanting, the confident dedication of the whole heart, would prove the speaker to be either an ignorant self-deceiver (see Je. 17. 9), or Christ, who can neither deceive nor be deceived. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Praising of God ought to be hearty, candid, and avowed: and they who inculcate it upon others should carefully exemplify it in their own prac-How extensive are the grounds of it! A God infinitely gracious and faithful, ever mindful of his new relation, and every promise thereof; holy and reverend in nature and in name. Ever-lasting, ordered in all things and sure, is his word, and all the redemption it offers and communicates to men. And they are the only wise persons who fear him and keep his commandments; everlasting shall be their honour and reward.

PSALM CXII. Ver. 3. Every torture of accommodation has been exhausted in applying this psalm to every believer, at least to every one of high attainments. But surely a comparison of this single verse with Ro. 3. 10, 21, 22, should have convinced every interpreter, that, though not altogether a prophecy, it was still a description, a spiritual picture of Messiah, whereby the church might recognize him at his coming. C.

Ver. 9. He hath dispersed. This is explained by what follows. It means he is liberal and benevolent. He scatters with a bountiful, and yet wise and prudent hand, whatever God commits to his stewardship. P.

REFLECTIONS.—What holy awe of God, delight in spiritual things, candour, kindness, and equity, are necessary in our obedience to God's law! And great profit, stability, honour, safety, quietness of mind, and victory over all our enemies, are secured for its reward. But how unhappy are the wicked, whose wishes shall be either cursed or denied: and to whom even the happiness of the godly is an insupportable vexation.

PSALM CXVIII.

1 An exhortation to praise God for his mercy. 5 The psalmist by his own experience showeth how good it is to trust in God. 19 Under the type of the psalmist the coming of Christ in his kingdom is ex-

2 Let Israel now say, that his mercy endureth for ever.

3 Leta the house of Aaron now say, that his mercy endureth for ever.

4 Let them now that fear the LORD say, that his mercy endureth for ever.

5 Is called upon the Lord in distress:1 the Lord answered me, and set me in a large place.

6 The LORD is on my side; I will not fear: what can man do unto me?

7 The LORD taketh my part with them that help me; therefore shall I see my desire upon them that hate me.

dishonouring to God, is the worshipping of idols. And | ful, to walk always as under his eye, and in conformity how absurd it is for idolaters to upbraid the saints | to him; in subjection to his will as our Father, and how absurd it is for idolaters to upbraid the saints with their all-present, all-creating, and all-governing JEHOVAH. Great is their encouragement to trust in a God, who is so much, and gives so much to his people; nay, gives so much to men! They can never fail whose faith stands firm. And greatly then should we exert ourselves in praising and serving God here, as in death we shall have no such opportunities for it.

PSALM CXVI. Ver. 3. Can this be true of any but the 'Man of Sorrows, acquainted with grief?'—of him who was exceeding 'sorrowful even unto death;' which death lies within the dominion of Satan, by whom its power is still vindictively exercised? See He.2. 14. C.

Ver. 10. Were there yet any question that Jesus, in his sorrows, is the speaker, the quotation of this verse by Paul (2 Co. 4. 13) would put the matter beyond controversy. 'The same spirit of faith' spoken of, ver. 13, cannot possibly have a correspondent, but 'the life of Jesus,' referred to in ver. 11. C.

Ver. 11. In my haste. 'In my ecstasy,'—Sept. 'My agitation.'—Horsley. All men are liars—'are deceiful.'—Green. The very fact which our Lord, returning from his agony in Gethsemane, implied, 'when he came to his disciples, and found them asleep,' and said, 'What! could ye not watch with me one hour?' C.

Ver. 15. As the eye of man gazes with delight on a precious gem, so the most lovely, the most precious of all things in the sight of God, is the patient and triumphant death of his saints. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Happy are they who love the Lord!

They are every moment laid under fresh obligations to this delightful exercise. Prayers heard by God should always make us love him more, and praise him more. And if we are in Christ, our troubles may be very sore, but our victory and deliverance are sure and near. Delightful consolation and rest succeed the bitterest tribulations to his saints. And pleasant is that rest which is enjoyed in a Saviour's arms, and under the covert of his blood. It is honourable, as well as duti-in dependence on him as our all-sufficient portion. The consideration that we are in the land of the living should quicken us to it. And it is delightful to speak and practise that which our heart believes upon God's testimony, ratified by the blood of his Son. But often, under strong temptations and in deep afflictions, the strongest believers have had their faith shaken, and have been surprised into thoughts and words extremely dishonourable to God. Yet he upholds all believers, and makes them quickly to change their voice. And O how pleasant it is to be so overwhelmed with a sense of God's love, that we scarcely know what praise, what vows, or what service to return him in gratitude! But while we praise him for what we have received, we must eagerly drink more and more of his cup of salvation, and receive more and more out of his fulness, and grace for grace. How precious and delightful to God is the death of his saints for, or in, the Lord! Buruch more that unparalleled death of Jesus Christ for the world, who loosed all our bonds and secured all our blessings.

PSALM CXVII. REFLECTIONS.—Thrice happy is the Gentile world when blessed with the fulness of Christ! Behold mercy preached, offered, and given to us! mercy abounding to the chief of sinners; mercy to us! mercy abounding to the chief of sinners; mercy extending to millions of lost souls, and securing to all who believe, purity, strength, comfort, and glory! Behold also the unchangeable faithfulness of God, confirmed by his oath and blood, and engaged to make good to us all the promises of his everlasting word!

PSALM CXVIII. Ver. 5. 1 called. There are sufficient 1062 characteristics in this psalm to demonstrate that Christ is the speaker. But it is unnecessary to examine them, as the psalm its thrice in the New Testament directly applied to Christ; and, on one of these occasions, in his own presence, see ver. 26, compare with Mat. 21.9; on another by his own lips, Mat. 23. 39; and again, ver. 22 is applied to our Lord by Peter, Ac. 4.11. C.

Ver. 10. All nations, &c. This was literally fulfilled when the Jews in the persons of the congregated multitude, and the Romans in the persons of Plate and the soldiers, encompassed our Lord at his trial and crucifixion. C.
Ver. 12. Destroy them. This has been fully verified in the dispersion of the Jews, and the utter dismemberment of the Roman empire; nay, in the literal destruction of the effeminate emperors, their profligate legions, and idolatrous subjects—by the irruption of those northern nations that now occupy their fields, their cities, and adopt their name. C.
Ver. 10. Surely none but Christ ever entered by the gates of righteousness; presenting himself 'without spot' before God. Others follow, only because washed by his blood, and accepted in him. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Animated are the saints' praises to their God, when the mercy that is in his nature and relation to all is clearly discerned; the mercies he hath granted are kindly reviewed; and the mercies he hath in store and in promise are firmly believed! No wonder that such invite all around them to sing of his wonder that such invite all around them to sing of his everlasting mercy and grace! No wonder they pour contempt on all created confidences, and disregard all opposition from earth and hell! No wonder they ascribe the glory of all to God; that they ask all from God; that they gratefully dedicate themselves, and all that they have, to his service; and exert all their powers to exalt his honour and spread his renown!—
But chiefly let us here hehold Jesus and his sure mercent. powers to exait his nonour and spread his senowhile.

But chiefly let us here behold Jesus and his sure mercies.—He was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death. Terrible was his distress, innumerable his conflicts with the enemies of our salvation! But, trusting in God, complete was his victory, and glorious his deliverance! Solemn was his ascension into heaven. And, crowned with glory and honour, invested with all power in heaven and on earth, and furnished with all gifts, all blessings, for men, he reigns upon his throne above. Encouraged by these views, let us welcome him into our hearts, families, and churches, and devote ourselves to his service. And believingly claiming him and his Father as our God, our all in all, let us ever exult in his project.

PSALM CXIX. As in the works of God one star different from another star in glory, it is not surprising if, in the Word of God, one portion is found to surpass another in the preciousness of its sacred contents. All parts of Scripture are alike true; yet are there arous ways in which one portion may surpass another. Some parts surpass others because they concentrate truths of deeper interest; point the finger of their light towards fairer objects; stir up the weary spirit to higher aspirations; and minister to the sick soul the air and the sun of a brighter climate—and all this because they contain more than other portions do of the person, the humiliation, the sorrows, the fervent prayers, the strong cries, the flowing tears, and earnest supplications—and more of the death, the sacrifice, the resurrection, the righteousness, the intercession, and glory of Jesus!

Of Ps. cxix. all this is specially true; other psalms shine as

suns in the firmament; this is a constellation of suns—a galaxy of divine light and glory—Jesus its 'all and in all.' That this may appear, the attention of the unprejudiced and godly reader is humbly solicited to the following facts: (1) One speaker, whoever he be, speaks of himself throughout the whole psalm. (2) The following is the speaker's character, drawn by himself, under the sure guidance of the Spirit of God: 'With my whole heart have I sought thee, ver. 10.—Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee, 12.—With my lips have I declared all the judgments of thy mouth, 13.—I will not forget thy word, 16.—My soul breaketh for the longing that it hath unto thy judgments at all times, 20.—I have kept thy testimonies, 22.—Teach me, O Lord, the way of thy statutes, and I shall keep it unto the end, 33.—I shall keep thy law; I shall observe it with my whole heart, 34.—I shall keep thy law ontinually, for ever and ever, 44.—I have not declined from thy law, 51.—I have kept thy law, 55.—I kept thy precepts, 36.—I will keep thy precepts with my whole heart, 69.—I forsook not: I will never forget thy precepts, 87, 88.—Thou, through thy commandments, hast made me wiser than all mine enemies; for they (the commandments) are ever with me, 98.—I understand more than the ancients, because I keep thy precepts, 10.—I have not departed from ty judgments, 102.—I have sworn, and I will perform it, that I will keep thy righteous judgments, of 10.—I do not forget thy law; I erred not from thy precepts; I have inclined my heart to perform thy statutes alway, 100-11. I will never foot of the order of the order of the procepts; 1 have inclined my heart to perform thy statutes alway, 100-11. I will keep the commandments of my God, 115.—I will have respect unto thy statutes continually, 117.—I have done judgment and justice, 124.—Thy testimonies are wonderful, therefore doth my soul keep them, 129.—My real hath consumed me, 129.—I cried with my whole heart: hear me, O Lord, I will keep thy statutes, 145.—I do not decline from thy testimonies, 157.—I have hoped for thy salvation, and done thy commandments; I have hoped for thy salvation, and done thy commandments; I have kept thy precepts and thy testimonies, for all my ways are get thy commandments; 173.—176.

Now, that David never imagined such a character for himself is historically unquestionable. The finger of the Spirit of truth ever pointing to his sin renders the supposition impossible. Would Paul have mistaken the portrait for his own? When he dipped his pencil in colours of truth and light, he produced a portrait of himself, inscribed as 'the chief of sinners.' Who then is this? Say, is not this Jesus, the chiefest among ten thousand, and altogether lovely? Yes, this is unquestionably the guileless, the spotless Lamb, who magnified the law and made it honourable: who knew no sin, yet was made sin for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him.

In face of this inevitable conclusion, three difficulties present themselves: (1) In ver. 67 the speaker admits, 'Before I was knowledgment of personal error and sin? Not so, the difficulty arises from the translation. The word here translated 'went astray,' signifies to vander, either naturally or morally. Thus it is translated in a natural and not a moral serse, Ge. 21. 14; 37.

15. Now, if the natural sense explain the passage, and if the moral sense of wandering be utterly inconsistent with the as 46 I' will speak of thy testimonies also before kings, and will not be ashamed.

47 And I will delight myself in thy commandments, which I have loved.

48 My hands also will I lift up unto thy commandments, which I have loved; and I will meditate in thy statutes.

50 This is my comfort in my affliction: for thy word hath quickened me.

52 I's remembered thy judgments of old, O LORD, and have comforted myself.

serted character of the speaker—a character, be it remembered, every word of which has passed the testing fire of the Holy Spirit, then surely there can be no doubt, that in the natural, and not in the moral sense, the word wandered is here to be taken.

(a) A second obstruction to the acknowledgment of Jesus in this psalm, arises from the frequent prayers of the speaker for teaching and guidance. But this obstruction arises merely from allowing the brilliancy of the Son's Godhead to dazzle and confuse the eyes in contemplating his manhood. Christ was truly God, Jn. 7.21. 14; he was as truly man, made in all things like unto his brethren, yet without sin. Now, in this humbled condition he appeared not in 'the form of God,' but 'the form of a servant.' And hence, 'though he were a Son, yet (being in servant form) learned he obedience by the things that he suffered,' He. 5. 8. And, as the teaching Spirit descends to us only by the prayer of Christ to the Father, In. 12. 16, so we behold our Lord, in the days of his flesh, call upon the Father for the same heavenly instruction. (3) The third obstruction to the acknowledgment of Jesus in this psalm is found in ver. 176, 'I have gone astray like a lost sheep.' This obstruction, however, is but another mistranslation. The word here translated 'gone astray,' is not the same that occurs in ver. 67. The word here used signifies to pant, and is so translated, Is. 22. 4. A more correct rendering is unquestionably as follows:—'I have panted as a sheep pertialing,' and this is in perfect keeping with the life, toils, and condition of our Lord in the sorrowful days of his flesh. C.

This is the most perfect specimen of an acrostic or alphabetical psalm in the whole book. Its peculiarity lies in this, that each letter of the Hebrew alphabet in regular succession begins eight consecutive verses. Though it might be thought that such a consecutive verses.

mode of construction would give a somewhat stiff and constrained formality to the whole poem; yet such is not the case. The genius of the Hebrew poet overcame all restraints, and produced a work, perfect in form, and yet free, beautiful, and inspiring. It has been well said by a recent writer,—'If we would fathom the depth of meaning in the written law of Israel, if we would measure the elevation of soul, the hope, the confidence, even before princes and kings, which pious Jews derived from it, we must turn to this psaim. Here is an epitome of all true religion as conceived by the best spirits of that time.' P.

Ver. 1. Law. From a root signifying to teach. It here signifies all divine instruction. C.

Ver. 2. Testimonies. From a root comprehending the idea of futurity. The witnessings of God concerning things to come. C.

Ver. 4. Precepts. From a word signifying to visit, to inspect. Those orders and institutions that continually remind the church of the visitation of her omnipresent Head. C.

Ver. 4. Precepts. From a root signifying to engrave. These significant divine institutions in which man is specially required neither to add nor diminish. C.

Ver. 13. Were there no other note of character in the whole psalm, this alone seems sufficient to identify the speaker as Christ.

Who else ever declared all the judgments of God?—Note, Law, testimonies, precepts, statutes, commandments, judgments, having been explained in notes on ver. 1-7, will not again be noticed. C.

Ver. 18. Those wondrows things that lay in its holy constitution—unbending justice, awful penalties, and glorious end: its successful teachings, bringing souls to Christ; and its marvellous result, in entering, that sin might abound; but effecting, in divine wisdom, that grace did much more abound. C.

Ver. 33. That Christ, though a Son, learned obedience through the things that he suffered, is the testimony of the Holy Spirit, He. 5-8. He accordingly prays for the teaching he requires, and thereon resolves, as none but he could resolve without self-ignorance and self-reliance, that he shall keep the statutes of his Father to the end; that is, to the full production of everlasting righteousness, Ro. 10-4. C.

Ver. 49. Wishes, expectations, and even hopes may be generated and sustained without any solid foundation. Thus it is said, the hypocrate's hope shall perish, Job 8 13; see also Pr. 11. 7. True Christian hope can rest upon no foundation but the revealed Word of God, the word of truth and of promise that can never mislead into error, or make ashamed by disappointment. C.

Ver. 67. I went astray. Whether these be taken as the words of Christ or of some of the prophets, they cannot be taken morally, for that would contradict ver. 22, 31, 51, 55, 56, 67. But these verses describe a character applicable to none but Christ. The translation, therefore, must be (see preface to this psalin), 'I wandered,' that is, as a stranger in a strange land, till by affliction, I learned the end and business of my incarnation, ver 73, 'was made perfect,' He. 5, 8, as an example, I Pe. 2.21, and as a High-priest and sacrifice, that my church might be saved, He. 8. 1-3; 9, 28. C.

Ver. 69. 'The word rendered forged means to patch together; and then it is applied to charges or accusations against any one, perhaps from their being made up las they often are) of shreds and patches,—hints, small matters, things having no necessary connection in themselves, but brought together as if they pertained to the same transaction,—words dropped here and there in conversation, which, being artfully woven together, seem to make out a plausible case against a man. Most slanders are formed and sustained in this way, for it is rare that an absolutely forged slander is uttered against a man, or that a charge is brought which cannot be made to have plausibility from such cumstances as thos? referred to above (Barnes). P.

This final appeal is very touching. The psalmist casts himself an humble, helpless, erring suppliant at the feet of his God. He confesses his inability even to aid himself. His only trust is in the divine goodness and mercy.

dom of Christianity and the circumstances of society. If piety were a restraint or a burden, this opinion might be true: but since it is a privilege and a blessing, it must be unfounded. C. Ver. 160. Let my cry. A cry is the voice of a child in want or pain, or of man or woman in deep and poignant distress. Of the cries of our Lord in his distress we have no special record beyond that contained in Mat. 27. 46, 50. But Paul, by the Spirit, leads us more into the secret history of our Lord's heart, feelings, and sufferings, and declares, in accordance with all that is written of him in the Psalms, that, 'in the days of his flesh,' he 'offered up prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears, unto him that was able to save him from death, and was heard in that he feared,' He. 5. 7. which I may try my heart and my life. Let me constantly inquire-Are these gracious tempers and holy exercises of faith, love, hope, humility, patience, and zeal, to be found in my soul? Has my heart, purged from an evil conscience in Jesus' blood, made these meditations, prayers, resolutions, and confessions truly my own? Is God's Word, his Testaments in Jesus' blood, the sole standard of all my faith and law of my practice? Is it the channel of Jesus' fulness of grace and comfort to my heart? Is it the instructor, the and comfort to my heart! Is it the instructor, the counsellor, the quickener, the medicine, the armour, the treasury, the wealth, the support, the guard, the joy, and the ALL of my soul? Do I receive it as a word to me from God, and use it as my plea with him for whatever I need? Happy is he that is thus living in these delicities of a medical delicities. in these delightful exercises

PSALM CXX. Title. This and the fourteen following psalms are entitled Songs of Degrees, or Ascending. Why or from whom they received this title, no man knows, and conjectures are manifold, but useless. C.

6 My soul hath long dwelt with him 9that hateth peace.

7 I am for peace: but when I speak, they are for war.

Ver. 1. In my distress. There can be no question that Ps. cxviii. is delivered in the name of Christ. See ver. 22. On comparing this verse with Ps. 118, 5, the identity of the speaker in the two psalms will scarcely be questioned. Comp. also Ps. lii. C. Ver. 4. In ver. 3 a question is asked substantially as follows:—
'What shall the deceiful tongue give thee—what will it do to thee?' Reference is made to the person who uses his tongue in this manner. What effect will it entail upon him—what punishment will it bring? The reply is given in ver. 4, in language highly figurative. It will entail such punishment as would be inflicted by the sharp arrows of the warrior; it will by. such exquisite pain as would be produced by the glowing cos. 3 of juniper, the heat of which is intense. P.

REFLECTIONS.—Inveterate maline against the sail.

REFLECTIONS.—Inveterate malice against the sain. never refuses the basest means of venting itself: and it is the saints' ordinary lot to be virulently reproached by the wicked. But dreadful, penetrating, destructive, furious, and lasting is the ruin of their reproachers at last! It is grievous for the lovers of God to be long removed from public ordinances, or to be forced by necessity into continued connections with the wicked. But every one born of God ought to be a child of peace. Envy and strife are all from hell. And though others continue inveterate, we ought to abound in charity, and follow the things which make for peace.

PSALM CXXI. Ver. 1. The margin, Boothroyd, and other high authorities, read this verse as two questions, and this sense seems preferable. C.

Ver. 2. Recollecting first that this, being a promise of the Spirit, must be true—then there will be little difficulty in concluding that such a promise could only be realized in Christ. See also ver. 7, 8. Here the church, by the Spirit, replies to Christ, and ministers to him promises nearly parallel to those in Ps. xci. C.

REFLECTIONS.-In every difficulty our eyes ought teaches by words; but his Spirit is the teacher that effects the entrance and diffuses the light of Jesus! C.

Ver. 130. My seal heath consumed me. The quotation (Jn. 2. 17) from Ps. 69. 9, and, so far as it goes, its perfect parallelism to that in this verse, affords a farther evidence that this psalm is dictated by the Spirit in the person of Christ. C.

Ver. 142. The righteousness of God never means a rule of fateousness, any more than the love of God means a mere rule love. The love of God means just the love of God, neither more nor less. It is the work which God the Father gave the Son to do; it is the work which God the Father gave the Son to do; it is the work which God the father gave the Son to do; it is the work which God the father gave the sabideth for ever. C.

Ver. 148. Study, business, and piety alike court early and late hours. The student of nature, art, literature, or science awakes before the sun, outwatches the stars, and often disregards the sacrifice of health at the shrine of his beloved idol. The pursuit of riches claims votaries still more numerous and decided. And surely piety can claim no less. Wherefore, if its studies, privileges, and duties be shuffled into some mere corner of time and attention, what is it but a sure preparative for being speedily and infinal'y cast away!—Abot, The continuity of piety in thought, temper, reading, and prayer, is the only sufficient evidence of its sincerity and vitality. C.

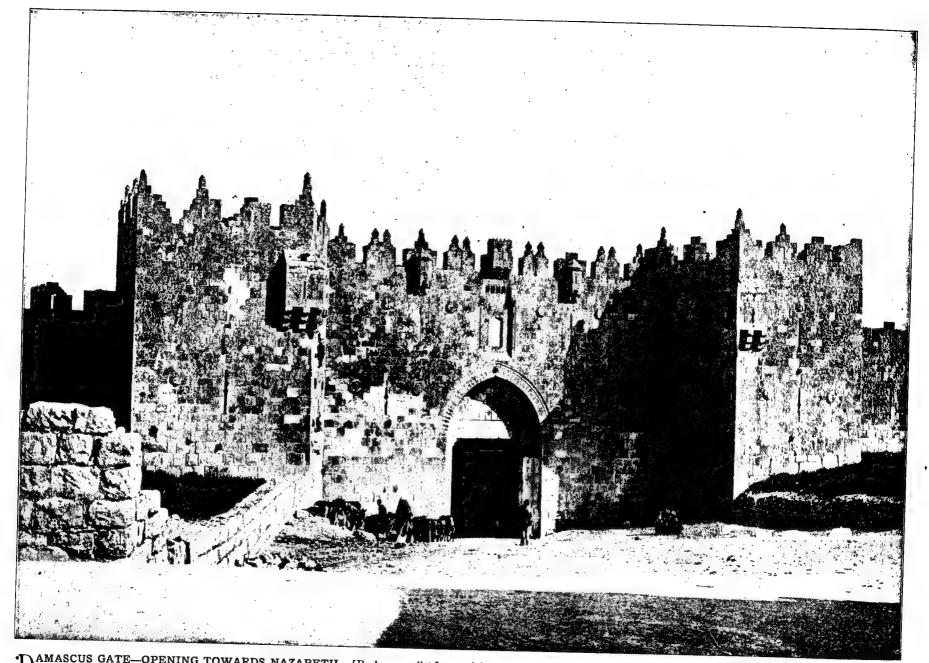

Ver. 156. He that prays, 'O Lord, quicken me according to lyny judgments,' must be one who has nothing to fear, because certain, when judged, to be justified in the Spirit, i Ti, 3.-16. C.

Ver. 157. Fear, favour, and covetousness are the three great causes of decliving from a faithful adherence to the testimonies of God. Fear of suffering or loss begets base compliances with protor of all evil,' bribes many to forsake what they believe to be true, follow what they know to be error, and practise what they feleve to be sinc.

Ver. 164. Streen times and y. That seven signifies c true, follow what they know to be feel to be sin. C.

Ver. 16a. Seven times a-day. That seven signifies completeness is undoubted. It seems equally undoubted that here it signifies seven fixed and specific periods for secret prayer.—Note, Fixed times of prayer seem to many inconsistent with the free-

AMASCUS GATE—OPENING TOWARDS NAZARETH. [Psalms, cxxii:2.]—
"Our feet shall stand within thy gates, O Jerusalem." Damascus gate, or the gate of the column through which passes the north road to Galilee and Damascus, is the most ornamental of all the gates which stand in the walls of Jerusalem. It is made picturesque because of its many turrets and battlements. The Damascus gate, according to Bartlet, is a fine piece of Saracenic architecture. Other authorities claim that it dates back to a more remote antiquity than Bartlet supposes. This gate is not a great ways from the place supposed by many now to be the site of Mount Calvary. The tombs of the kings are about 1100 paces north of Damascus gate. Next to Jaffa gate, the Damascus gate is the one most frequently used of any in the Jerusalem walls.

PSALM CXXII. Ver. 1. I was glad. There is clearly but a single speaker in ver. 1, 8, 9, and this is the 1 rince of peace, who alone has power to grant true peace to his church. Jn. 14. 27. C. Ver. 6. REFLECTIONS.—They who love God himself cannot but delight to draw near unto him in the ordinances of his worship: cannot but love his church, and he

of his worship; cannot but love his church, and be earnestly concerned in prayer and in practice for her real welfare. From regard to the saints, who are therein begotten and nourished up to eternal life, and especially from regard to the honour of her God, they will constantly seek her good.

PSALM CXXIII. Ver. 2. In several eastern countries, masters and mistresses call their servants by clapping the hands; and direct them in their work by signs, often imperceptible to strangers. Some interpreters think the verse refers to servants condemned to punishment, and watching for a sign of mitigation or foreigness.

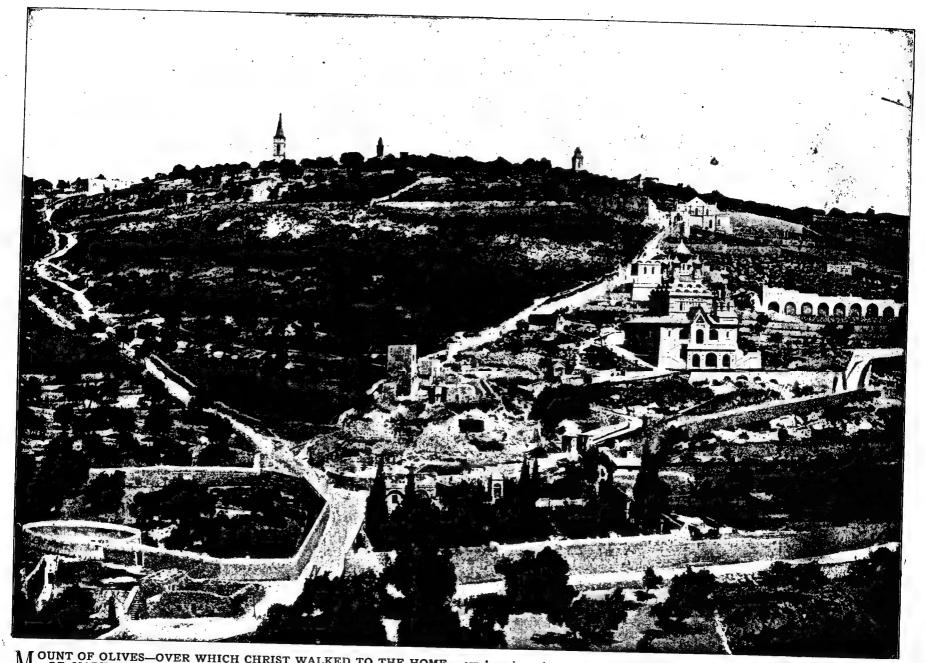

REFLECTIONS.-In what a humble, resigned, and obedient temper, and with what earnestness, ought we to look up to God for help and deliverance. While his great mercy encourages us, our great contempt and trouble should drive us to his throne of grace, and oblige us to wait upon him till he grant our requests.

the enemies of the church rage against her, and threaten to carry all before them! But power and policy in vain unite to destroy the souls faithful to our God. And when we are in appearance nearest to be overcome and perish, we then may be made more eminently to experience the salvation of God.

PSALM CXXV. Ver. 2. Jerusalem stands on the summit of a broad mountain ridge, which is broken into a wilderness of bare crowns of limestone, separated by deep ravines. Upon two of these crowns, Zion and Moriah, the ancient city was founded; and these two were bounded on the east by the valley of Kidron, and on the west and south by Hinnom. All around the site are loftier summits—nothing approaching to mountains, but rounded, irregular ridges, overtopping the buildings of the city from 50 to 500 ft. Thus it is that 'the mountains are round about Jerusalem.' P.

OUNT OF OLIVES—OVER WHICH CHRIST WALKED TO THE HOME OF MARY AND MARTHA. [Psalms, cxxv:2.]—"As the mountains are even forever." East of the valley of Jehoshaphat rises the Mount of Olives. This is one of the mountains which the Psalmist refers to as standing round about Jerusalem. There are a number of olive trees still found upon the mountain, and upon its western base is a cluster of ancient ones known throughout the world to indicate the Garden of Gethsemane. The top of this mountain is held by many to be the place where the Savior left the earth, and his footsteps are still shown to those who are willing to believe extraordinary things. According to the Scripture, Christ ascended from Bethany. From the top of the Mount of Olives we have the most commanding view of the city of Jerusalem.

PSALM CXXVI.

1 The church, celebrating her incredible return out of captivity, 4 prayeth for, and prophesieth her own future joyfulness. aA song of degrees.

WHEN the Lord turned again the captivity of Zion, we were like them that dream.

2 Thene was our mouth filled with laughter, and our tongue with singing: then dsaid they among the heathen, The Lord hath done great things for them.2

3 The LORD hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad.

4 Turns again our captivity, O Lord, as the streams in the south.4

5 They that sow in tears shall reap in joy.5

6 He' that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him.

PSALM CXXVII.

in vain. 2 It is vain for you to rise up early, to sit up late, to eat the bread of sorrows; for so he giveth his beloved sleep.

3 Lo. children are an heritage of the LORD; and the fruit of the womb is his reward. 4 Ash arrows are in the hand of a mighty man; so are children of the youth.

5 Happy is the man that hath his quiver full of them: they shall not be ashamed, but they shall speak³ with the enemies in the gate.

PSALM . CXXVIII.

The sundry blessings which follow them that fear God. aA song of degrees.

BLESSED bis every one that feareth the LORD; that walketh in his ways.

2 For thou shalt eat the labour of thine hands: happy shalt thou be, and it shall be well with thee.

3 Thy wife shall be as a fruitful vine by the sides of thine house; "thy children like olive plants round about thy table.

PSALM CXXVI. Ver. r. When. The when in this verse, fike the now in Ps. 124. 1, is confined to no special period; for the whole history of Israel, from the moment they became a people, has been a history of captivities in the hands of enemies, and merciful deliverances by the hand of their God. C.

REFLECTIONS.—God's church is often in great tribulation for a time: and no deliverance comes till God himself effect it. Noted deliverances make observers to wonder, and saints to rejoice. But the more his people are now exercised in spiritual mourning, the more remarkable shall be their fruits of holiness and PSALM CXXVII. Ver. 2. 50. 'Surely' (Horne). The affections of God's children are set upon things above; and though not free from sorrow or anxiety, they are always able to cast their cares upon him that careth for them, 1 Pe. 5. 7. Therefore, while the world waketh, God's beloved sleep; yea, in hours of deepest calamity he sends them the repose that a purified conscience can alone confer. Argyle slept in calm composure the night before his martyrdom: his chief persecutor saw it, and never forgot this miracle of grace. C.

REFLECTIONS. -The less we depend upon our own schemes, or lean to our own understanding, and the more we look up to God for help and direction, the better shall we prosper. The most prudent projects and plans, the most anxious cares, and the most toilsome labours, are all to no purpose without God's blessing. But happy in their rest, and happier in their dutiful children, are they whom he blesses!

irksome or more degrading than labour. In the view of God it is blessed; and gratefully to enjoy the produce of a man's toil, is declared to be a special mark of the divine goodness. C. Ver. 5. Thou shalt see the good of Yerusalem. The believer always sees the good, even of the natural Jerusalem; he sees it in her present converts to Jesus, and her future restoration. Of the spiritual Jerusalem, the good is visible to sense, as well as to faith. C.

REFLECTIONS.-How excellent and profitable is real and experimental godliness, issuing in a holy practice! It draws the blessing of God upon our labours, our families, on the church of God, and on our posterity.

PSALM CXXIX. Ver. 1. The now here, as in Ps. 124.1, refers to no particular time in the history of Israel; but was true at all times since Israel was first persecuted by Esau. And surely till the end, 'all who live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer 11 The LORD hath sworn in truth unto David; he will not turn from it; Of the fruit of thy body⁶ will I set upon thy throne.

12 Ifp thy children will keep my covenant and my testimony that I shall teach them, their children shall also sit upon thy throne for evermore.

BEHOLD, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity! 2 It is like the 'precious ointment' upon the head, that ran down upon the beard, even Aaron's beard; that went down to the *skirts of his garments;

3 As the dew of Hermon, and as the dew that descended upon the mountains of 'Zion: for there the LORD commanded the blessing, even life for evermore.

PSALM CX
An exhortation to God's service the arterial pouring out the arterial song of corrections of the carenty pattern, the priests and Levies in their courses kept nightly as well as daily watch in the temple.—C. BEHOLD, bless^b ye the Lord, all ye servants of the Lord, which by right¹ stand Israel into apostasy, as Midian, Nu. 25.2, 3, and afterwards Antiochus, severally attempted—nor have they prevailed to extirpate the nation, as Haman sought, and several Gentile nations have since endeavoured. C.

REFLECTIONS.—In every age the seed of the serpent has raged in enmity against Jesus Christ and his church. There is no going honourably to heaven but through great tribulation. But let the wicked lay their plots, and execute them as they will, God will deliver all who accept Christ; and unbelievers shall plunge themselves at last into the most dreadful disappointment and ruin. The curse of God shall blast them, with all their schemes and extensive. with all their schemes and attempts.

PSALM CXXX. Ver. 1. On comparing this verse with Ps. 40. 1, 2, &c., there can be no doubt of their parallelism: but that Ps. xl. is spoken in the person of Christ, is settled by the quotation, He. 10. 5, whence it follows that in this psalm the speaker also is Messiah. C. Ver. 3. If thou shouldst mark down sins indelibly, instead of cleansing them away in the blood of the Lamb, who would dare to appear before thee under such innumerable and condemning stains? C.

REFLECTIONS .- In the most fearful manner God often corrects his own children in their way to his kingdom. But while there is a praying heart within them, and a prayer-hearing God above them, there is no ground of despair. Sense of guilt is the first thing that strikes the mind of a convinced sinner; and did not God manifest his forgiving mercy, it would drive him to despair. But the faith of God's forgiving our sins, for Christ's sake, bestirs a holy awe of, regard to, and earnest waiting for him. And the more we taste of God's forgiving and redeeming goodness, the more shall we encourage others to flee to him, and hope in him, in the time of great guilt and trouble. And not only is God ready to, but he certainly will, accomplish the perfect redemption of all his people from sin and all its consequences.

PSALM CXXXI. Ver. x. My heart is not haughty. The true description of him who said, 'Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden,' 'learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls,' Mat. xx.

28, 29. C.
REFLECTIONS.—Humility is the ornament of every station. A child-like spirit, meek and weaned from the things of this world, is a good symptom of a gracious heart. But to wade out of our depth, either in religion, learning, or power, is dangerous. And proud looks show a proud heart. If we are in trouble, let us patiently hope and wait till God bring us out of They who hope in Jesus Christ, and wait for his salvation, shall partake of it in time and in eternity.

PSALM CXXXII. Ver. 1. (1) Some suppose this psalm was written on occasion of bringing the ark from Baale, 2 Sa. vi. (2) Others, from comp. ver. 8, 9 with 2 Ch. 6.47, 42, suppose it written by Solomon for the dedication of the temple. (3) While A. Clarke supposes it written for the dedication of the second temple. On the first of these suppositions, it is impossible to reconcile ver. 2-5 with the history in 2 Sa. 6.9-15. And as to the second and third, neither can be reconciled with ver. 18, in which David is presented alive; whereas, at the dedication of the first temple he was ten or eleven years dead. Are we not, therefore, to is presented alive; whereas, at the dedication of the first temple he was ten or eleven years dead. Are we not, therefore, to understand by 'David and his afflictions,' the beloved Son of God and his sufferings? with his covenant obligations not to enter into his rest until he had found, in the heart of every believer, a residence for the Father and the Son? Jn. 14.23. C. Ver. 6. We heard of it. That is, of a place for the Lord—at Ephratah; that is, Bethlehem Ephratah, where the prophet forteold that Jesus (the true and living temple) should be born, Mi. 5. 2; Mat. 2. 6.—Fields of the wood. Synonymous with Ephratah—an obscure village, situated in the midst of woods. C.

REFE WCTIONS.—Great is the more yet on have fearent.

REFLECTIONS. -Great is the mercy to have fervent prayers of our own, or of our ancestors, lying before stant and active ought ministers to be in their service

God's throne of grace. They shall receive a gracious answer at last. Lively and zealous saints can never They shall receive a gracious be at ease till the ordinances of God be regularly and honourably settled, and his presence vouchsafed, to the comfort and edification of both ministers and people. However meanly the ark of God, or even Jesus Christ himself, reside for a time, its dwelling shall at last, and for ever, be glorious. Multitudes shall flock to it; and great fellowship with God shall be there enjoyed. Happy was David's family and kingdom on Christ's nappy was David's family and kingdom on Christ's account: but infinitely happier in this is the family and church of God. In virtue of JEHOVAH's new covenant with him, his people are blessed with his presence, and with spiritual dignity, provision, salvation, and joy; while Jesus himself triumphs in everlasting honours, and unbelievers are reduced to disappointment, misery, and shame misery, and shame.

PSALM CXXXIII. REFLECTIONS.—Scarcely anything more ruinous hath befallen the church of God than the manifold divisions, disputes, and animosities of her members. Since God's children have one Father, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, they ought to have one heart and mind; to be united in the same worship, and affectionate in their regards to bearing with, forbearing, and forgiving one another; and only jealous who shall show the most abundant meekness, charity, and kindness to each other: this would mark them as anointed by the Spirit of Christ; would be refreshing and fruc-tifying to their hearts and lives; and prepare them for the eternal life and blessedness above so do many rivers from Asia Minor—yet none of these seas has any outlets, all their waters are vaporized, and carried in clouds either to veil or irrigate the most distant lands.—He maketh lightnings, &c. Ver. 7, He causeth the vapors, &c. To the vaporization of water by heat, and its solution in the atmosphere, the earth and its inhabitants are indebted for the innumerable blessings derived from the clouds. The amount of vaporization is truly astonishing. The sacred Jordan flows into the Dead Sea—the mighty Wolga between the clouds. The amount of vaporization is truly astonishing. 6 Thought the LORD be high, yet hath he respect unto the lowly: but the proud he knoweth afar off.2 7 Though I walk in the midst of 'trouble, thou wilt revive me: thou shalt stretch forth thine hand against the wrath of mine enemies. and thy right hand shall save me.

8 The Lord will perfect that which concerneth me:3 thyo mercy, O Lord, endureth for ever: pforsake not the works of thine own hands.

PSALM CXXXIX.

1 David praiseth God for his all-seeing providence, 17 and for his infinite mercies. 19 He defieth the wicked. 23 He prayeth for sincerity.

To the chief musician, A psalm of David.

LORD, thou hast searched me, and known

2 Thou knowest my bdown-sitting, and mine up-rising; 'thou understandest my thought afar off.1

3 Thou compassest² my path, and my lying down, and art dacquainted with all my ways.

4 For there is not a word in my tongue, but, lo, O Lord, "thou knowest it altogether.

5 Thous hast beset me behind and before, and laid thine hand upon me.

6 Such knowledge is too wonderful for me; it is high, I cannot attain unto it.

7 Whither shall I go from thy Spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence?

8 If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there: if I make my bed in hell,4 behold,* thou art

9 If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea;

10 Even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me.

11 If I say, Surely the darkness shall cover me; leven the night shall be light about me.

12 Yea, the darkness *hideth6 not from thee; but the night shineth as the day: the darkness and the light are both alike to thee.

Jesus is seen to be that 'Bread that cometh down from heaven,' how much more wonderful then the number and necessities of the claimants, and how much more wonderful the grace of the Provider! C.

REFLECTIONS .-- Alas! how averse are mankind to the infinitely reasonable and delightful duty of praise and thanksgiving! They need repeated calls to it, even after it has been attended with remarkable blessings. God's mercy and goodness delightfully fill his nature and works, the most awful and tremendous not excepted. And stupid and careless observers must they be of creatures and events, who do not every-where perceive the manifold and everlasting mercy and kindness of God. Past mercies ought never to be forgotten, nor present ones overlooked; and all should issue in repeated returns of grateful praise

PSALM CXXXVII. Ver. z. The chief rivers of the Babylonian empire were, the united Euphrates and Tigris, which, dividing into several branches, form many rivers. See Eze. z. z. Da. 8. 2. Of the united Euphrates and Tigris, and the canals traversing the city to water its palaces, parks, and gardens, the psalm evidently seems to speak. C.

Ver. 2. Babylon was a square sixty miles in circuit; its streets fifteen miles in length. There will, therefore, be no difficulty in imagining how in so many squares as the city afforded, there would be a profusion of willows for the harps of the melancholy exiles. C.

would be a profusion of waterway for the marps of the metanchic exiles. C.

Ver. 3. Want of sympath with the feelings of others is one the commonest forms of human selfishness—of human sinf ness. C.

ness. C. Ver. 9. Happy. This implies no praise of deeds of horror, but the honour due to the judge who pronounces sentence against an incorrigible criminal. C. REFLECTIONS.—The sins of God's people often reduce them to great misery on earth. They are often punishment of it! 1074 taught the worth of ordinances by the want of them; and their temple songs are turned into howlings and grief. But cruel are the tender mercies of the wicked to God's suffering saints. And it is base and blasphemous to insult them with their worshipping of God. Sacred songs ill suit the call or company of profane scoffers. That which is holy ought not to be given to dogs, nor pearls cast before swine. The interest of Jesus' church and kingdom must ever be dearer to us than our life: and if duty be once clear, nothing must deter us from it. Not selfish desire, but holy zeal, must dictate our requests for the blessings of God on the church. Malicious and inhuman is all wickedness, and tremendous and correspondent is the

16 Thine eves did see my substance, yet being unperfect; and in thy book all2 my members were written, which in continuance were fashioned,3 whent as yet there was none of them.4

17 How precious also are thy thoughts unto me, O God! how great is the sum of them!

18 If I should count them, they are more in number than the sand: "when I awake, I am still with thee.

PSALM CXXXVIII. Ver. 1. When it is considered (1) That the speaker is one; (2) That he promises unreservedly his whole heart; and (3) That these words are a distinct parallel to Ps. 18.

49: Ro. 75. 9, then there can remain little question that the speaker is Christ. C.

Ver. 2. Magnified thy word. Thy word of promise, in its actual fulfilment, has magnified thee beyond all that thy name had led thy people to expect. See notes on Ex. 34. 5; Ps. 8. 1. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The greatest on earth need not be shanned of the public and regular worship of God.

And the more he manifests his loving-kindness and ashamed of the public and regular worship of coat.

And the more he manifests his loving-kindness and faithfulness in the fulfilment of his word to us, the more high and hearty ought to be our notes of praise. If we trust to his truth, he will display every perfections. tion, and make every creature to work together for the glorious accomplishment of his word. If we flee to God in prayer, he will not leave us destitute. And if he, by our afflictions, strengthen us inwardly in our souls, we are great gainers. The cheerful behaviour souls, we are great gainers. The cheerful behaviour f saints in the ways of God engages their neighbours to join with them in it. And the more humble men are, the more God regards and exalts them. And nothing is more detestable to him than indulged pride. Whatever trouble God casts his people into, he will protect and preserve them in it. And the good works of grace or salvation which he begins, he will perfect at last. He will never leave nor forsake his own. Let us then trust in him at all times, and pour out our

PSALM CXXXIX. Ver. 1. The speaker is one throughout the whole psaim—one still with God, ver. 18—one who drives far from him all 'bloody men.' ver. 19, who hates them with 'perfect hatred,' and who, so far from shrinking from the eye of omni-science, boldly requests to be both 'searched' and 'tried.' Let any one read and study these characteristics, and say, Is not this science, boldly requests to be both 'searched' and 'tried.' Let any one read and study these characteristics, and say, Is not this the Christ? C.

Ver. 2. Afar off—'of old,' that date described, Pr. 8. 22–31; from 'before God's works of old—from everlasting—from the beginning—before the earth was.' C.

Ver. 7. Spirst, when contrasted with presence, literally faces, means the Holy Spirit, Jn. 14. 16, 17, 26. This passage asserts, in the strongest manner, the omnipresence of the Spirit: but whoever is omnipresent must be God. C.

Ver. 12. That darkness to one creature is light to another is beyond question. This consideration may help our infirmity in discerning how much more to the Creator darkness must be as light—for 'God is light, and in him is no darkness at all.' C.

Ver. 13. Keins. The kidneys—called the reins, from the governing and guiding power which the Hebrews attributed to them in the animal and mental economy—were primary parts of the invacerds, offered in sacrifice to God. See Le. 3. 4, 10, 15. To 'possess the reins,' therefore, significe to possess the whole internal powers, as a devoted sacrifice to the divine majesty. C.

Ver. 24. Lead me. &c. Lead me 'in the old way' in which believers have worshipped thee, in spirit and in truth, since the beginning. C.

REFLECTIONS.—In the faith of these things let me always live, and always act, whether in religious or in always live, and always act, whether in religious or in civil affairs, under the deepest impressions of God's eyes upon me, his perfect knowledge of my heart, my thoughts, and deeds; of his all-filling presence ever with me, to witness, support, or comfort me; of his marvellous formation of me in nature and grace; of his new-covenant marriage to me, and his everlasting redemption of my soul. Let my whole life, night and day, be filled up with precious, fixed, and delightful thoughts concerning these things, and with holy im provements of them. Let me never make the Land's 1075 enemies my intimates. They who hate God hate his name and image wherever it appears. Let me therefore hate the ways of sinners, while I have true love and pity to their souls. And let a thorough cleansing from sin, and progress in holiness, be the earnest desire and ineffable delight of my soul.

PSALM CXL. Ver. r. 'Of whom speaketh the prophet this? of himself, or of some other man?' Ac. 8. 34. Let the prayerful inquirer consult Ps. xl., interpreted by He. 10. 5; then compare Ps. 2. 4, interpreted by Ac. 4. 26, with Ps. 59. 8, and consider its prayer for deliverance, compared with the similar prayer of this psalm, see also Ps. xliii, lix. lixiv. lxxi.—and the parallelism, nay the identity of the descriptions and peutions must point to Messiah in the days of his flesh, as the speaker in this psalm. The chief object of the prayer is deliverance from Judas and his employers, the high-priest and Pharisees, and from Antichrist, that wicked one, 2 Th. 2. 8, and his persecuting followers in a postate Babylon. C.

REFLECTIONS—Behold as in a class how well.

REFLECTIONS.—Behold, as in a glass, how maliciously Jesus Christ was reproached and persecuted; how he gave himself to prayer on account of it; and how the judgment of God overtook his Jewish murderers and persecutors! Let us likewise observe, that sin turns men into a kind of devils, in deceit, malice, and diligence in evil, and in inveterate opposition to the people of God. But the saints may attain, even amidst their troubles, to the most pleasant prayers and praises; for God terribly resents the injuries done to his people; and kindly will he maintain their cause, and for their protection afford them his presence.

PSALM CXLIII.

1 David prayeth for favour in judgment. 3 He complaineth of his griefs. 5 He strengtheneth his faith by meditation and prayer. 7 He prayeth for grace, 9 for deliverance, 10 for sanctification, 12 and for prayeth for grace, 9 for deliver the destruction of his enemies.

A psalm of David.

HEAR my^a prayer, O LORD; give ear to my supplications: bin thy faithfulness answer me, and in thy righteousness.1

2 And enter not into judgment with thy servant: for din thy sight shall no man living be justified.

3 For the enemy hath persecuted my soul; he nath smitten my life down to the ground; he hath made me to dwell in darkness, as those that have been long dead.

8 Cause me to hear thy loving-kindness in the morning; for in thee do I trust: "cause me to know the way wherein I should waik; ofor I lift up my soul unto thee.

9 Deliver me, O LORD, from mine enemies:

^qI flee unto thee to hide me.⁵

10 Teach me to do thy will; for thou art my God: 'thy Spirit is good, lead me into the land of uprightness.

11 Quicken" me, O Lord, for thy name's sake: "for thy righteousness' sake bring my soul out of trouble.

12 And of thy mercy cut off mine 6 enemies, need will make us importunate in prayer for speedy help, gracious acceptance, direction, preservation, and merciful restraints. Faithful and Christian reproof is merciful restraints. Faithful and Christian reproof is a necessary and kind office of friendship. And to love reproof, and be thankful for it, is one of the surest symptoms of a gracious heart. But that reproof will be most effectual which comes from those whose unsuspected piety gives weight to their words, and whose tender manner of applying it renders it soft and penertating. For men to pray to be put right, and yet to be displeased with rebuke for what is wrong, is base dissimulation. Often people never regard God's candidates for the magistracy or ministry, till their own be lestroyed or shamefully disgraced. But let the case of the church or saints be ever so deplorable, fervent of the church or saints be ever so deplorable, fervent prayers will soon render it hopeful. And if our eyes be fixed on God, our feet shall not slip. But the destruction of the wicked is determined, and their devices to hurt others shall but hasten their own wretchedness.

PSALM CXLII. Ver. r. This is a specimen of those 'prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears,' which Christ offered up 'in the days of his flesh' to 'Him that was able to save him, and was heard in that he feared,' He. 5. 7. If any desire more evidence of Christ speaking in these words, let them examine Ps. xvi. xxxi. xxxiv. lxix., which various quotations in the New Testament have, by the Spirit, interpreted of him; and their parallelism with this psalm must equally assign it Messiah. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Sore troubles ought to produce ferent prayers. They who have the God of all grace to vent prayers. flee to, may safely leave in his hand all their troubles. And when our consciences condemn us not, then have we confidence before him. We can never be brought so low but God can help us. If men forsake or dis-regard us, God, as our refuge and portion, will more than balance our want. If we are even fettered in the bands of corruption, temptation, or trouble, he can deliver us. And the mercies which our brethren enjoy should excite our praises, as members of the same

PSALM CXLIII. Ver. 2. Christ was not justified, that is, judged in the flesh, and legally pronounced righteous as a living man; but 'he was delivered (that is, to death) for our offences, and raised for our justification,' Ro. 4. 25, being 'put to death in the flesh, and quickened by the Spirit,' I Pe. 3. 18; and as Paul expresses it, 'God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit,' x Ti. 3. 16. C.

Ver. 10. Teach me. Let it never be forgot, that the Word 1076 that was truly God, became as truly flesh; and that Jesus, 'though a Son, learned obedience by the things that he suffered,' He. 5. 8. C.

Ver. 11. Quicken me—'God who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, hath quickened us together with Christ,' Ep. 2. 5. C.

REFLECTIONS.-If ever we hope for God's acceptance of us, it must not be for anything in us, but purely of grace, for his dear Son's sake, according to the promises of his Word. The most righteous cannot bear the severity of God's justice. They who best know their own hearts will ever be the first to condemn themselves, and to cry for mercy at God's hand. And they who plead guilty before the law, and flee to the grace of the gospel in Christ, shall be justified from all things. When our distress is greatest, God's power and grace shall be the more magnified in our deliverance. Though it he hard to avagain a convence of the Though it be hard to exercise courageous faith under sore troubles, yet remembrance of God's kindness, to ourselves or others, in former times, is very encouraging. And they who thirst for his presence, favour, and love, shall never be sent away empty from his throne of grace; whatever manifestations of mercy, direction, instruction, deliverance, guidance, quickenand destroy all them that afflict my soul: "for I am thy servant.

Ver. 3. On comparing this verse with Ps. 8. 4 and He. 2. 6–9, it will appear that the speaker is Messiah, made a little—rather, for a little—lower than the angels; that for his obedience unto death he might be crowned with glory and honour. C.

Ver. 5. The Lord literally descended upon Mount Sinai, taking upon earth a local habitation, that he might manifest his visible glory, Ex. 79. 18. Here he is represented as causing the heavens to bow to the earth, not in a mere figure, but in a reality—when he shall be 'revealed from heaven in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ,' 2 Th. 1. 8. Ver. 11. A right hand of falsehood. False to every engagement, however solemnly ratified; obliterating their baptism by

REFLECTIONS.—Behold, as in a figure, Jesus Christ, the child of heaven, advanced by his Father to his right hand, and invested with all power in heaven and in earth! There he rejoices in his God, and in his glorious victories of salvation, and makes intercession for the conquest and ruin of all evil, and for the abundant happiness of his people. -- Great and blessed is the believer's hope in the divine relations and perfections; and infinite is the condescension and kindness of God towards man: so mean, so unsubstantial, so transitory! Certainly then there shall come a day in which God will redeem his people out of all their deep waters of trouble, and justly reward his and their enemies. O what a mercy is it to receive, out of the hand of a reconciled God, children endowed with 1077 every corporeal and mental accomplishment, garners replenished with useful stores, thriving flocks and herds, and a safe and quiet commonwealth! not in earthly enjoyments, but in God himself, as our God and our ALL IN ALL, that solid and everlasting happiness consists.

PSALM CXLV. Ver. 1. The speaker engages 'to bless and praise the name of his God and King every day, for ever and ever, 'ver. 1, 2. And surely he who knows that every day he will be so able and inclined must be Jesus, 'the same yesterday, today, and for ever.' E. From comparing the structure of this yealm with He. 1. 10, it would appear, that in this verse the Father addresses the Son, whose 'mighty works' in creation, providence, and redemption, he expounds and extols before angels and men. Greatness can but be comprehended by viewing works made and upheld, enemies restrained and subdued, and obedient subjects ruled and employed. C.

Ver. 9. Lest any should impiously misinterpret these gracious bounded grace, and everlasting preciousness of a God in Christ! Happy are they who spend their time and Happy are they who spend their time and their eternity in the enjoyment and praises of him! How delightful is it to tell our neighbours, to tell our posterity, that which our eyes have seen, and our hearts have believed, concerning this God, who is LOVE; and to tell how this God shall be our God for ever! And it is delightful to behold and praise our exalted Re-

Be stirred up, therefore, my soul, to depend on him, who is my almighty Maker, my faithful and promise-performing Friend, my kind and righteous Protector, my bountiful Provider, my omnipotent Deliverer, my gracious Enlightener, my seasonable Restorer, my perpetual Preserver, and the just Punisher of all evil—my King, my God, and my in himself, when his greatness, wisdom, power, and goodness are so manifested in all his works. And when he so observes and provides for all his creatures, how impossible is it that his ransomed children should be overlooked or starved! Much of God is to be seen in all around us-in luminaries, in animals, in crops, in seasons, in human persons or societies; but, above all, in his church and in his word. If these be abused by us, it will be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment than for us.

That it also is applied to the whale, seems certain from its description as one of the mannualia, La. 4. 3, and from its property of holding its breath and violently emitting it, Je. 14. 6. C.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF PSALMS.

The Hebrew title of the Book of Psalms is 'Praises;' because the praise of God as Creator, Upholder, and Governor—as Father, Redeemer, and Sanctifier—constitutes their principal subject. The Greek title, whence our English name, 'Psalms,' is derived from the Septuagint, and describes these sacred compositions as accompanied by musical instruments. And this accompaniment was in accordance with the law of Moses, Le. 23, 24, &c., and the ritual appointed by divine revelation in the days of David and Solomon, I Ch. xvi.

But while praise justify the to God as Creator, Unhelder, and Governor of the revelation in the days of David and Solomon, I Ch. xvi.

But while praise is justly due to God as Creator, Upholder, and Governor of the world, much more is it due to him as Father, Redeemer, and Sanctifier. And as God the Father is made known and glorified by the Son—and as the Spirit glorifies both Father and Son, by taking 'the things of Christ and showing them' to believers—so it was to be expected that Christ, the beloved Son of God, the Messiah, the Saviour of sinners, would furnish the chief subject of praise in the heart and the songs of the church. Accordingly we have seen that the Psalms are full of Christ—the church on earth strictly imitating the church in heaven, in asserting that 'worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive power, and riches, and full of Christ—the church on earth strictly imitating the church in heaven, in asserting that 'worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive power, and riches, and have the fullest evidence. Thus, independently of that heavenly character which wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing;' and in ascribing blessing, and honour, and glory, and power unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb, for ever and ever.

and unto the Lamb, for ever and ever.'

The Psalms constitute the great storehouse of prayer in every mood and condition of the spirit. 'Is any merry—let him sing psalms.' Is any sad—they will teach him to cry from the depths of affliction. Is any persecuted—they will furnish him with petitions for a refuge and deliverance. Is any in want—they will lead him to the Friend of the poor and needy. Is any in sickness—they will lead him the way to the true Physician. Is any dying and in misery—they will show him the path of life, ending in fulness of joy at the right hand of the Eternal. And all this they do, because they are the spiritual revelations of the 'supplications, strong crying, and tears' of Jesus in the days of his flesh; and therefore furnish to his disciples the model and the material of their prayers of faith.

The writers of some of the Psalms are known, and the Jews enumerate ten. But this is of little importance—for that the author of all was the Spirit of God, we bears witness of their heavenly origin-we have, in the New Testament, more frequent attestations of their divine origin, than for any other book of the whole Scripture collection. They are at least fifty times quoted by our Lord or his apostles. And besides furnishing to our Lord the most powerful of his arguments against the unbelieving Jews, they also furnished him the words in which, upon the cross, he both prayed and expired.

According to the Masoretic copies and the Syriac version, the Psalms are divided into five books: the first extending from Ps. i.-xl.—the second from Ps. xii.-lxxii.—the third from Ps. lxxiii.-lxxxix.—the fourth from Ps. xc.-cvi.—and the fifth from Ps. cvii.-cl. The first four of these end with 'Amen and Amen;' the last with 'Hallelujah.' This division was very ancient, as it evidently existed before the Septuagint translation.

Most of the Psalms have titles prefixed, which by some, as ancient traditionary expositions of the contents, are held in high esteem, and considered as endued with a kind of canonical authority. But some of the highest authorities amongst the ancient Christian writers—as Augustine and Theodoret—have freely admitted that these titles have often no relation to the body of the psalm, and seldom contribute anything to the discovery of the meaning. In their great obscurity all are agreed; and conjectural meanings are so various that they cease to be of value. These titles have accordingly been retained, partly out of respect to those that, in any degree, value them, and partly as mere relice of extinctions that they can be accordingly been retained, partly out of respect to those that, in any degree, value them; and partly as mere relics of antiquity, esteemed not for any intrinsic worth, but as samples and memorials of the works of other times.

That the Psalms are occasionally prophetical of Christ no Christian can overlook or deny. That but few, however, are thus prophetical of him, has been an opinion extensively circulated and received—the number of such specially prophetic psalms being ordinarily confined to Ps. ii. xvi. xxii. xl. xlv. lxviii. lxxii. lxxxvii. cx. and cxviii. But were the correctness of this meagre enumeration admitted, still the real relation of the Psalms to Christ remains unsettled. For the real question is, not how many psalms are prophetical, but how many are descriptive of Christ, and proved to be descriptive of him, because they apply accurately to him, and however they may be strained by the efforts of 'accommodation, still utterly refuse to become applicable to any other. Could we conclude with Origen, Chrysostom, Theodoret, Augustine, Ambrose, Euthymius, and others of the ancient Christian writers, that David was the author of all the Psalms—or admitting, as is commonly believed, that other inspired authors wrote a part of the collection—yet could we accurately ascertain how many were composed by David—and it is upon all hands accurately ascertain now many were composed by David—and it is upon all hands admitted that he composed a large portion—we would then be able, upon David's own authority, or rather upon that of the Spirit speaking by him, greatly to extend, if not to universalize, the prophetic boundaries of the Psalms. For that the psalms written by David himself were prophetic we have David's own authority, which, as Horsley observes, may be allowed to overpower a host of modern expositors. For thus king David at the close of his life describes himself and his sacred songs: 'David the son of Jesses said, and the man who was raised up on high, the anointed of the God of Jacob, and the sweet psalmist of Israel said, The Spirit of Jehovah spake by me, and his word was my tongue,' 2 Sa. 23. 1, 2. It was the word, therefore, of Jehovah's Spirit which was uttered by David's tongue. But it should seem the Spirit of Jehovah would not be wanting to enable a mere man to make complaint of his own enemies, to describe his own sufferings just as he felt them, and his own escapes just as they happened. But the Spirit of Jehovah described, by David's utterance, what was known to that Spirit only, and that Spirit only could describe. So that if David be allowed to have had any knowledge of the true subject of his own compositions, it was nothing in his own life, but something put into his mind by the Holy Spirit of God; and the misapplication of the Psalms to the literal David has done more mischief than the misapplication of any other parts of the Scriptures among those who profess the belief of the Christian religion. (See Horsley on the Psalms, vol. i. p. 14.) Nor do we hesitate to express our frum conviction, that a right interpretation of the Psalms, whereby Christ is so clearly discovered in his person, his offices, his passion, his victories, his glories, and his judgment, will bring a light, a comfort, and a joy to the heart of the believer, unknown while darkness lay upon this blessed portion of the Sacred Volume. C. seem the Spirit of Jehovah would not be wanting to enable a mere man to make

THE BOOK OF PROVERBS,

And the two immediately following, were penned by Solomon, the renowned king of Israel. Its Hebrew name MISCHLIM imports sentences well pressed together, and powerful to command our assent and regulate our conduct. Teaching by such proverbs, or short substantial sentences, was a very ancient, and is a very plain, profitable, and easy method of instruction. These Proverbs of Solomon are not a mere collection of the wise sayings which had been uttered before his time, but are the inspired dictates of the Holy Ghost to him; and are often quoted or alluded to as such in other inspired books. This book comprehends: (1) A preface; consisting of manifold exhortations to the study and improvement of true wisdom, and of warnings to avoid connections or intimacy with wicked persons, whoredom, rash suretiship, sloth, &c. ch. i.-ix. (2) The Proverbs themselves; published from the beginning, x.-xxiv., or copied out by the direction of Hezekiah, xxv.-xxix. (3) The appendix; containing the prophecy of Agur, and the directions of his mother to him, xxx. xxxi. As the Book of Psalms is calculated to make our hearts warm towards God in holy and pious affections, the scope of this is to make our face shine before men in a prudent, discreet, honest, and useful conversation; which is a no less necessary part of religion. And no book in the world, in so small a compass, affords us such a complete body of rules for directing our personal and relative behaviour.

CHAPTER I. Ver. 1. The choice, divine, substantial, instructive, and governing, but sometimes darkly expressed, sentences of the incomparably wise and inspired Solomon. 2. Framed by the Spirit of God to teach men true and solid wisdom in things per-taining to God and their neighbour, to enable them to discern sin and duty, and to receive and profit by whatever good instructions or advices are given them: 3. To incline and persuade them readily to hearken to such instructions as direct them to live in a wise, candid, such instructions as direct them to live in a wise, candid, upright, and virtuous manner; 4. That those who are unskilful, rash, and incautious, may become circumspect, prudent, and discreet in their conduct: 5. And those who are wise in the matters of time and eternity, and those who are wise in the matters of time and eternity. may become still more wise and prudent; and be able, with great advantage, to govern themselves and others; 6. And be capable of finding out the meaning of the wise, though dark, sayings of God or men, and profitably to apply them to themselves, or explain them to others.—7. It is necessary that every one who desires true wisdom should begin with, and chiefly study, the saving knowledge of God, and live under a holy awe in the love, worship, and service of him; as, without this, all other knowledge is vain and useless; and, for want of it, wicked men, who prefer trifles to things of infinite importance, pour contempt on the wisest instructions that can be given them. 8, 9. And, next to the fear of God, it is necessary, my dear young men, that you reverence, honour, and obey your parents, and gladly receive and earnestly practise their instructions, as things of inestimable value, which will render you more amiable and honourable than all the gay adorning on earth. 10. And, in order to promote the fear of God and regard to parental instructions, see that with the utmost circumspection and earnestness you avoid all unnecessary fellowship with wicked persons, and all hearkening to their flattering enticements. 11-15. If, in the most courteous manner, and by every argument robbery, or any other wickedness, abhor their counsels and flee from their company: 16. For, being set on mischief themselves, if they once entangle you, they will perpetually hurry you from one horrid crime to another. 17. And while they lay snares for others another. 17. And while they lay snares for others whom they reckon rash and inconsiderate, themselves, which the dangerlike silly birds, rush into courses, of which the danger ous issue might be easily perceived: 18. And, in the end, all their pains and cunning to undo others bring ruin upon themselves from the hand of God and men: 19. And all unrighteous methods of procuring wealth but issue in the destruction of the procurers. but issue in the destruction of the procurers.—20-23. While you shun and abhor the enticements of the wicked, listen to the voice of Jesus Christ, the wisdom of God, who, in his word and ordinances of the gospel, in the most public, affectionate, earnest, and importunate manner, calls you, however simple, ignorant, foolish, or even scornful, to forsake your wicked courses, and turn drawn from profound secrecy, sure success, immense to him by faith and repentance, to receive his Spirit, profit, and good fellowship, they would seduce you to

PALMYRA ROAD—LEADING FROM DAMASCUS TO TADMOR, THE CITY SOLOMON BUILT IN THE DESERT. [PROVERBS, i: 1.]—Solomon inherited from his father David a vast kingdom. His dominion stretched from the river Euphrates to the Mediterranean Sea, south to the river of Egypt, and north to near where the city of Aleppo now stands. Damascus was within his territory, and he built Palmyra, called Tadmor, in his day. This is a city in the wilderness, and that Solomon built it we learn from I. Kings, ix: 18, and II. Chronicles, viii: 4. Tadmor is between the Euphrates and Hamath, and is situated in an oasis of the desert. The celebrated Queen Zenobia had her capital and home in Palmyra. She built up a mighty kingdom which rivated and defice the Roman power. She was captured and brought to Rome by the emperor Aurelian. A. ID 273. We give here as illustrating this first chapter of Proverbs, written by Solomou, a picture of a road leading out from Damascus to Tadmor, the city he built.

It originally involved, therefore, the idea of a simile, but it had given to it at an early period a wider signification. It came to denote 'such short, pointed as wider signification. It came to denote 'such short, pointed as wider signification. It came to denote 'such short, pointed asyings, as do not involve a comparison directly, but still convey their meaning by the help of a figure. From this stage of irapplication it passed to sententious maxims generally, many of which, however, still involve a comparison. Such comparisons were either expressed, or the things compared are placed side by side, and the comparison left for the hearer or reader to supply. Next we find it used of those longer pieces in which a single idea is no longer exhausted in a sentence, but forms the germ of the whole, and is worked out into a didactic poem. Many instances of this kind occur in the first section of the Book of Proverbs.' The title therefore which is here given by the author or compiler to the whole of this book is appropriate, expressing very well its general character. P.

Ver. 2-4 form a general introduction to the whole book, explaining briefly its nature, and stating its object. The object was, to impart wisdom, not merely theoretical, but practical; such wisdom, in fact, as will enable man to understand what he is himself, what God is, what he owes to God, what is necessary for his salvation, and how he is to live, and speak, and think in the world. P.

Ver. 5. A voice man will hear. Right hearing is the great mark and duty of God's children. It is the great remedy against idolary:

'Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord, De. 6.4. It is the special claim of Jesus: He that hath ears to hear, let him hear, Mat. 13. 9. It is the special claim of the Spirit: 'Let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches,' Re. xxvii. It is the great principle of the spiritual life: 'Hear, and your soul shall live,' Is. 55. 3. It is the great channel of faith: 'Faith cometh by hearing,' Ro. 10. 17. C.

Ver. 7. The fear of the Lord. 'Doth not perfect love cast out fear?' 'True, but not the fear of God. It casteth out the fear of condemnation, Ro. 8. 1; it triumphs over the fear of reverence for the majesty, the holiness, and the mercy of God. C.

Ver. 23. I will four out my Spirit. Christ, 'in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge,' Col. 2. 3, here promises to pour out that Spirit which alone can make the letter of the word effectual, and the soul wise to salvation. C.

Ver. 26. How can a merciful Saviour thus 'laugh and mock' at the 'calamity and fear' of sinners? Just because they are still impenitent sinners. The devil is even now as much a 'liar and a murderer' as he was in the beginning of his rebellion, and his hosts 'believe and tremble,' but they never desire to lave. Even so, the 'carnal mind' abideth 'emity against God,' and hates the Judge while it writhes beneath the judgment. C.

REFIECTIONS.—The inspired oracles of God are cal-

REFLECTIONS .- The inspired oracles of God are calculated to convey the most solid and precious instruc-tion in the things both of time and eternity: and it is necessary and profitable that all, even the wisest, should carefully search them, particularly in the days of youth, in which the faculties are most quick, the temptations most numerous, and our conversation, for time and eternity, just forming. Deep regard to God and to parental admonitions are highly necessary in those who desire true wisdom. But there can be no solid knowledge or prudence where the heart is not changed, believes not on Christ, and loves not God as in him. With amazing earnestness and craft do sinners seduce others, particularly young and simple ones, into fellow-ship with them in sin. It is necessary, therefore, to be always impressed with the awe of God's omniscience and just judgment, that no temptation of secrecy of gain may tempt us to wickedness: and to avoid the society of the wicked if we choose to escape their ruin. But with what infatuation do men, more stupid than birds, rush into danger when fairly warned! and in ruining others, they but ruin themselves in a more miserable manner: and however secrecy or power may protect them from men, the judgment of God overtakes them. Their cruelty and avarice hurry them and their companions into lasting misery and woe. their companions into lasting misery and woe. Alas! how great is their folly, who, for a perishing world, destroy an immortal soul; and for a momentary plea-sure, plunge themselves into everlasting woe! But great is the compassion of Jesus to such rebellious sinners: in the most earnest and open manner he pleads with them, in the ordinances of his grace, to promote their eternal salvation. Condescending are his offers and invitations of mercy, pointed to the most unworthy and wicked; and precious and necessary the benefits which he offers. But inexcusable is their guilt, and dreadful their ruin, who obstinately refuse them. jected of God in their misery, even their ease and pro-sperity harden and ensnare them, and aggravate their woe! But blessed above all with salvation and rest are those who receive them, and listen to his gracious

CHAPTER II. Ver. 1-5. And for your excitement and encouragement, know assuredly, my children, that if you entertain, receive, and lay up in your heart the instructions and directions which I now give you; if you earnestly study, and importunately pray for, the enjoyment of Jesus Christ, and of all true and spiritual wisdom and knowledge in him, as infinitely more precious, useful and desirable than all the tree and spiritual window. cious, useful, and desirable than all the treasures on earth, then you shall, by the influences of the Holy Spirit, happily obtain your desire, and be enabled and directed to know, obey, fear, love, worship, and serve God in a proper and truly acceptable manner. 6-9. For as wisdom and every other blessing is the free gift of God, he in his Word hath revealed, and by his Spirit bestows it upon men, and gives them a true and spiritual knowledge of himself and his ways. He hath in store, and is always ready to bestow upon such as ask it, true, solid, and substantial wisdom. And while he instructs and directs, he, by his almighty providence, infallibly preserves from soul-ruining mischiefs such as walk in a sincere, candid, and upright manner. He guides and enables the lovers of holiness to persevere in their integrity according to the rules of his Word, and preserves them from being drawn aside from it or en-dangered in it. And in seeking wisdom from him, you shall come to understand his righteousness and wisdom in all his administrations, and be enabled to imitate him in everything truly holy and virtuous. 10. And it Jesus Christ, the spiritual knowledge of divine things, and the power of practical godliness, have once been admitted to your heart and into your affections, 11-15. These will tend to preserve you from the crafty and ruinous seduction, either of subtle men, who, having apostatized from everything good, walk and delight in the perplexed ways of vice, and in making others as wicked as themselves, drawing them aside, and entangling them in courses directly contrary to their own true interest, safety, conscience, or reason; 16. Or of light and lewd women, unworthy to be reckoned Israelites, who set themselves, by all the arts of flattery, to decoy such as you into whoredom; 17. Perfidiously alienating their affections and persons from their own husbands, and disregarding the solemn vows made to them at marriage; 18. And who really love no one, but promote the death and eternal damnation of all such as cultivate any familiarity with them. 19.

Very few who are once ensnared into their impure embraces are ever, by the grace of God, recovered to a penitent, chaste, and virtuous life on earth, or to everlasting glory in heaven.—20-22. And, moreover, while you are preserved from the ruinous infection of these you are preserved from the ruinous infection of these wicked seducers, you shall be enabled to follow the example of the holy patriarchs and prophets; and, in consequence of this, shall happily dwell in this promised land of Canaan, and inherit the spiritual and everlasting felicity prefigured by it.—While these wicked seducers and their followers shall, after a short-lived described of progressive, he invisually driven from this lived flourish of prosperity, be furiously driven from this land and earth, and cast into the woe and depths of hell.

land and earth, and cast into the woe and depths of hell.

Ver. 4. Pearls are brought up from the depths of the sea; gold is washed from the earth and sands; silver is dug from the depth and armine; gems are extricated from the solid rock; the relics of antiquity are separated from rubbish and ruins—and shall the unscarchable riches of Christ be expected on the surface, as the reward of the indolent, or the discovery of accident? No. The believer searches in study of the Word, in study of the ways of Providence, in study of his own heard, in the depths of sovereign grace and eternal love—and discovers those treasures that lie hid from the wise and prudent, but which God by his Spirit reveals unto babes. C.

Ver. 9. Understand righteousness. It should never be forgotten that there is but one righteousness that can ever be discovered, the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all, and upon all them that believe, Ro. 3. to, 22. C.

Ver. 12. Men, evil in heart and froward in speech; for in the heart originate all evil things, and out of the abundance of an evil heart the mouth speaketh, Mat. 12. 34. C.

Ver. 17. A woman who has violated her marriage vow is here exhibited. Faithless to God, faithless to man—the perjured wanton is at once the original and the emblem of all that is most seductive, dangerous, and deadly. But to view the passage as a mere warning against a wicked woman, were to narrow it far within the limits of its full meaning. She is the emblem of that heathen idolatry by which the spirit is seduced from God, and immersed in sensuality; and she is the emblem of that seductive apostasy in the nominal Christian church which is called Babylon—with whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication, and whose judgment, though it linger, will come in one hour, Re. 18. 9, 10. C.

REFLECTIONS.—With remarkable diligence should we attend to all the exercises of true religion. Lord is ready to bless such as are diligent with great success; and usually bestows upon them remarkable instruction, satisfaction, and protection. There is need of real religion to season and rule our heart; and of God's special preservation and our utmost caution while we live in this world, where men of corrupt principles, and women of treacherous and corrupt practices, so greatly abound.

In their sinful courses such are generally obstinate and crafty. Ensuring are rally obstinate, active, and crafty. Ensnaring are their enticements, and dangerous and ordinarily ruinous their connections: and few, once entangled in their wickedness, ever seriously repent, or turn to Jesus Christ for life and salvation. Happy then are they who are delivered from them, and enabled to walk as truly pious and circumspect. Godliness has the promise of this life and of that which is to come. Even now the saints alone have a blacked with the saints alone and the saints alone have a saints alone with the saints alone have a saint alone with the saints alone and the saints alone are saints alone as the saints alone are saints alone as the saints alone and the saints alone are saints alone as the saints alone are saints alone. now the saints alone have a blessed portion on earth; and at last they only shall inhabit the new earth, into which no wicked person shall ever enter.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 1, 2. Let me therefore again entreat you, my dear children, to receive, and rivet in your judgment, memory, will, and affections, the counsels and commands which I now give, that you may practise them in your lives: thus shall your temmay practise them in your lives: thus snail your temporal life be long, healthful, and prosperous; be attended with a pleasant life of grace here, and followed by an eternal life of glory hereafter. 3, 4. And while you live by a cordial, constant, and assured faith in the mercy and faithfulness of God, pledged in his Word. study always, as your great honour, to imitate him in kindness, compassion, and uprightness: thus shall you be highly respected and honoured, and shall prudently order your affairs both before God and men. 5, 6. Always, by faith in his spiritual promises and relations, depend wholly on God for strength, direction, and success in your undertakings, and never upon your own knowledge or carnal prudence. In every undertaking believe and depend on his overruling power, observe his directions, and implore and wait for his favour and blessing, and he shall guide you in all your proceedings, and bring them to a happy issue. 7, 8. Never indulge a conceit of your own knowledge or wisdom, as if it were sufficient to direct you in the easiest matters: but under the influence of a holy and filial awe of and regard to God, avoid with care whatever he has forbidden in his law: as that is the way to promote the health, strength, and comfort of both soul and body in time and eternity. 9, 10. In just gratitude to God, who has bestowed all that you have upon you, make conscience of employing your estates in works of piety, for the maintenance of his worship, and of charity to his poor, and of justice to all men: so shall mis blessing abundantly increase them in everything useful and comfortable. 11, 12. Never overlook or contemn the afflictions which you meet with, as if they were trifles, or happened by chance; and never grow weary of them as an intolerable burden, or take any unlawful course to remove them; but kindly receive and submit to them as the corrections of a kind and gracious Father, in which he manifests his distinguished love to and care for your souls.—13-18. Thrice happy is the man who through much tribulation, and with much care and pains, obtains the enjoyment of Jesus Christ, and the spiritual wisdom and knowledge that is in and by him. This is infinitely preferable to every thing gainful, comely, precious, or profitable on earth. By this we are secured in all the real blessings of this present life and of that which is to come. In cleaving to Jesus, and walking in his ordinances and laws, the most delightful comforts and pleasures, the most blessed tranquillity of mind and conscience, the most happy success of affairs, and eternal rest with God in glory, are to be enjoyed.—Immortal, quickening, and invigorating is the satisfaction enjoyed by every one who earnestly embraces his person, receives his instructions, and steadfastly walks in his ways. 19, 20. And no wonder that Jesus Christ, and the spiritual wisdom and knowledge that are hid in him, should be so profitable, pleasant, and comfortable, when by him, and in the exercise of his infinite wisdom, God formed, founded, and settled the heavens, and earth, and seas, and all that is therein and walke the forest hand all streams for the nourishment of animals, and the clouds to drop down dews and rains for the nourishment of plants, corn, and grass.—21-26. Be it therefore your earnest care to fix these my instructions in your heart, and to keep them always before your eyes, as the means of obtaining true and profitable knowledge and prudence. You will find them infallible promoters of true life, and honour, and comfort, temporal, spiritual, and eternal. By means hereof, you, by the blessing of God, shall prosper in your labours, and be kept from falling into sin or danger; and under his protection you shall enjoy the most safe and pleasant rest and refreshsnain enjoy the most sate and pleasant rest and refreshment. No reports of sudden and approaching danger, or of desolating judgments, appointed for or effected by the wicked, need in the least terrify you; for the Almighty JEHOVAH, in whom you have placed all your trust and confidence, shall support, protect, and preserve you from danger. 27, 28. Never delay the payment of just debts or the significant of the state of your trust and conndence, shall support, protect, and preserve you from danger. 27, 28. Never delay the payment of just debts, or the giving to the Lord, or to the poor, beyond the first opportunity afforded you, as you know not if ever Providence will give you another. 29. Never contrive mischief against any: especially against such as depend on your equity and kindness. 30. Never be quarrelsome and contentious: and espe cially to such as have done you no injury. 31, 32. Never let the prosperity and wealth of oppressors tempt you to wish yourselves in their condition, or to imitate them in their injurious conduct; for wilful and obstinate oppressors are infinitely detested and hated of God: but his secret counsels and comforts are vouchsafed to but his secret counsers and comforts are vouchsated to such as walk uprightly and honestly. 33. Evil-doers, however great, and all that they have, are under the destructive influence of God's curse; but good men, being under the incluence of his favour and blessing, may be happy in the meanest condition upon earth.

34. God will certainly at last expose proud mockers of religion and virtue to scorn and contempt; but will render such as are meek and humble highly respected and honoured. 35. And though persons truly wise unto salvation may for a time be abusively reproached and contemned, yet they shall, in the most free and that is therein, and makes the fountains to pour forth fixed manner, enjoy honour from God and men at last; 1084

Ver. 2. The ffth is the first commandment with promise; which ever in this life receives a literal fulfilment, as far as it serves for God's glory and the good of his people: also a spiritual fulfilment; for believers always count their days by the continuance of goodness and mercy; and their life has become truly long from their of believers always count their days by the continuance of goodness and mercy; and their life has become truly long from their desire to depart and be with Christ.' But hereafter the promise is fully realized in all the blessings of life and immortality. C.

Ver. 5. Trust in the Lord. Trust in the Lord's word, whatever hath been thy own previous opinion; trust in his promise, whatever hath been thy own previous experience; and trust in his guidance, whatever may be thy doubts, difficulties, or fears. C.

Ver. 16. Some think this description of temporal blessings is confined to the Jewish, and not literally extended to the Christian dispensation. This, with the exception of the promise of possessing Canaan, is an unfounded distinction; 'for godliness is profitable unto all things, having the promise of the life that now is,' IT. 4. 8. The true meaning of the verse lies in referring its promise to the gift of eternal life, and the acquisition of the 'unsearchable riches of Christ.' C.

Ver. 17. Ways of pleasantness. A way is rendered pleasant, (1) by health to journey and enjoy; (2) by the smoothness of the path; (3) by the beauty of the prospect; (4) by the safety of the country; (5) by the agreeableness of companions; (6) by the prospect of a cheerful and happy rest and welcome at the end: all these meet when Jesus is 'the way.' C.

This does not signify any secret information that God gives to the one, while he withholds it from the other (for the grace of God hath appeared unto all men, teaching them that, denying ungedliness and worldly lusts, they should, live soberly, righteously, and godly): but it signifies God's residence in the hearts of believers, which this world can neither see, imagine, nor admit; and that secret comfort which he administers to them by his promises and Spirit, in the midst of all the public trials of which they are partakers, and that secret acquittal which he reports to their consciences, in the midst of all the public calumnies they may be condemned to underlie. C.

Ver. 34. Giveth grace unto the lowly. It does not signify that God gives grace to men who have become lowly, previous to grace, or without grace, by a mere effort of unrenewed nature: but that he first gives lowliness, which is a grace of the Spirit, and then, where he has already sown the seed, continues to water and give the increase. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Real religion has a glorious and blessed tendency to render men happy in themselves.

blessed tendency to render men happy in themselves, and blessings to all around them. And those who neglect and despise it are in general mean-spirited, foolish, and self-ruining wretches, dishonourers of God, and plagues to mankind. But great is the shame that the professors of religion so little conform their lives to the excellent rules thereof, that they so little exemplify the excellent rules thereof, that they so little exemplify them in their behaviour and conduct. And comely would the church of God appear if that regard to God's law, faith in him, devotion, resignation to his will, diligence in his work, and that truth, mercy, equity, peacefulness, humility, and prudence towards men, required in his Word, were duly exercised.

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 1-3. My dear young friends, attend to and receive these affectionate, wholesome, and profitable instructions which I give you: and while you live, earnestly practise the same. They are the you live, earnestly practise the same. They are the very same which I myself, as a darling son, and intended successor on the throne, received from my pious and affectionate father David. 4-9. He, in the most careful and earnest manner, instructed me in my child-hood, and begged me to fix his instructions and direcnood, and begged me to ix his instructions and directions in my heart, and practise them in my life, as the means of attaining true and lasting felicity. He earnestly recommended to me the getting of Jesus Christ, and the true knowledge and fear of God in him, and cleaving thereto, as the grand and effectual means of preservation from sin and danger, and of obtaining happiness and honour both in time and eternity.* As you wish to live long and prosperously, receive, and observe in your practice, these my instructions. I do not direct you into paths of folly, fraud, or perverseness, but into a course of wisdom, integrity, and virtue; in which you may prosecute business without any entangling difficulties, and with ease, despatch, and certain success. Carefully fix these instructions in your mind and heart, and persevere in the practice of them, as on this your happiness in time and eternity depends. 14-19. With the utmost care and abhorrence avoid the company and course of wicked men, and every temptation thereto; and with the greatest speed and earnestness flee from it if you have been entangled; for such is the malignity of their dispositions, that they can take no rest till they execute their villanous intentions, and are perpetually disturbing themselves in order to ruin others. They neither have, nor desire, any other provision to live on than what get by unjust and violent courses. And while good men daily grow in knowledge, grace, and holiness of conversation, till they arrive at perfection, wicked men, amidst gross ignorance, error, confusion, crimes, and wretchedness, rush on heedlessly till they are plunged into everlasting misery. 20-27. And in order to retain in heart, and practise in life, these my excellent instructions, which are a source of lasting and complete happiness to all who improve them aright, watch over your heart, and keep your mind, conscience, will, affections, thoughts, and desires, with uncommon earnestness, as from these do originally issue the eter-

Let your mind and munication proceed from your mps. Let you mind thoughts be fixed only upon the right paths of holiness and virtue, that you may walk in them without ever turning from them; and never let your eyes, by fixing turning from them; and never let your eyes, by nxing on improper objects, seduce you into sin or danger. Before you fix upon any action, carefully examine whether it be agreeable to God's law, and answerable to the end for which you intend it; and let every step you take in life be rightly ordered, according to the rule of his Word. And, by shunning extremes on every hand, labour to avoid everything offensive or injurious either to God or men. either to God or men.

either to God or men.

Ver. 18. Even the private path of the just (the believer justified by faith, Ro. iii.) is as the shining light. It shineth more and more before God, in faith and love: more and more before men, in diligence and zeal; more and more before the church, in knowledge and edification; more and more before God, in humility and holiness. C.

Ver. 23. Keep thy heart with all diligence. Keep it with the diligence of a guardian, that would fence it against intrusion or assault; with the diligence of a servant, that would attend to its necessities and requirements; with the diligence of a steward keeping all accounts of expenditure and gain; and with the diligence of a physician, attending to its symptoms, and prescribing for its diseases; and with the diligence of a friend, taking equal pleasure in bearing with its infirmities, sympathizing with its sorrows, relieving its necessities, and participating in its joys. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is the greatest honour, as well as REFLECTIONS.—It is the greatest honour, as well as duty, of parents carefully to instruct their children: and it may be infinitely useful after both instructors and instructed are laid in the dust. fellowship with wicked persons or practices, or even to render us intent on, and delighted in, the most cruel and barbarous conduct! But wide is the difference in time, and especially in eternity, between the way of holiness and that of iniquity. While the saints gradually grown in groce here and live in english of licity. noliness and that of iniquity. While the saints grad-nally grow up in grace here, and live in endless felicity hereafter, the wicked blindly rush forward into everhereafter, the wicked bindly rush forward into ever-lasting misery. Great circumspection, care, diligence, and watchfulness are therefore necessary in denying angodliness and worldly lusts, and in living soberly, righteously, and godly in this present evil world.

CHAPTER V. Ver. 1, 2. And, my children, what I am just going to say requires your particular and most serious consideration, that you may be able to preserve yourselves from the most subtle and dangerous deceits, and, by your pious and prudent discourses and admonitions, prevent the ensnarement of others. 3-6. For, astonishing are the arts, and inconceivable the enchanting flatteries, of whorish women, as if nothing but the most pure and exquisite pleasures were to be enjoyed in fellowship with them: but dreadful is the real issue thereof, in the impairing of men's health, strength, estates, and reputation; and in remorse of conscience, wretched death, and endless damnation. And to prevent your repentance and escape from their snares, they will turn themselves into ten thousand forms, that they may work on your several humours. 7-14. Let me, therefore, with the utmost affection, earnestness, and solemnity, beseech you to avoid such women, and all, even the most distant, approaches to familiarity with them, as a dangerous, an infernal plague; lest you for-feit your credit, and sacrifice your vigour of life to base and cruel wretches, who labour to ruin you to every intent, and for ever; and lest your wealth, and the iruit of your care and labour, should by their means be standard from you to others; and when your substance is gone, and your body pining to death, under horrible diseases, you should have nothing left you but inexpressible torment of conscience, reflecting upon the pressible torment of conscience, reflecting upon the faithful admonitions of parents and teachers which you have contemned, and the miseries you do, and must for ever, undergo. 15-19. And to prevent your having the smallest inclination to the base and polluting pleasures of whoredom, marry; and in a wife, wholly your own, enjoy and rest contented with the pure, chaste, and honourable pleasures of the marriage tests. and honourable pleasures of the marriage state. Take pleasure in having children by her, sporting in the streets, or dispersed into families. Have children by her alone, and which you are sufficiently certain are her alone, and which you are sumciently certain are really your own. Make your wife happy, by an affec-tionate cleaving to her only: and take pleasure in her innocent and delightful company. While you live innocent and delightful company. While you live together, let her always be amiable in your eyes; cherish her with the most tender affection; and in her embraces, and tender regard, always take such satisfaction as to prevent your affections in the least fixing upon another in her stead. 20, 21. And when you can upon another in her stead. 20, 21. And when you can so fully, pleasantly, securely, constantly, innocently, and honourably enjoy such pleasures in a pious and affectionate wife, why risk everything dear, to enjoy the base, dishonourable, destructive, and damning the base, dishonourable, destructive, and damning pleasures of whoredom—especially when the all-seeing God witnesses your most secret conduct, and will quickly reward or punish you according to the nature of it? 22, 23. Nor shall whoremongers and adulterers long escape his insupportable justice;—their own guilt and lust shall for ever bind and hold them fast under the power of his wrath. To punish their conguilt and inst shall for ever offine and note them has under the power of his wrath. To punish their con-tempt of former instructions and warnings, God shall abandon them to impenitence, and permit them madly to rush forward, through increasing crimes, into endless damnation.

and eternity; the knowledge of God in Christ, reconciling the world to himself; the knowledge of regeneration, whereby men are renewed in heart, speech, and behaviour; the knowledge of glory, into which fornicators and adulterers can never enter. C. Ver. 6. Movable. Like the shifting sands at the estuary of rivers, that move in a storm, and destroy many vessels before their new positions can be sufficiently ascertained. But let it never be forgot, that whilst this wicked and seducing woman is a real character, she is also an emblem of heathen idolatry and Christian apostasy; that like her, lead the soul away from God, and promising life, lead down to the ways of destruction and death. See note on ch. 2.17. C.

Ver. 19. The loving hind and pleasant roe. The affection of many quadrupeds and birds—nay, of some animals of the deepfor their young, presents an instructive lesson, and often a killing reproof, to rational, immortal, and accountable beings. But however great the evil and the shame, when human beings become unfaithful to one another—how much greater when the harlotry of error seduces the church from her Saviour—when 'the ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib, but Israel doth not know, God's people do not consider?' REFLECTIONS.—It is snamerul and snocking that mankind should be inclined, nay, so much inclined, to a sin so base, so beastly, and ruinous, as whoredom.—That even in the sex where modesty ought to shine with distinguished lustre, wretches should be found who impudently entice to it! Surely it must be very absurd to prefer the pleasures of it, attended with miseries innumerable, to the innocent, the sanctified joys and honours of the marriage state! But no wonder that they who atheistically discredit the omniscience and justice of God, and live thoughtless of their future account, should proceed to the most infamous lengths in wickedness. Yet let them remember, that in the most miserable manner, correspondent to their sins, they shall at last be hurried into endless fire!

enslaved yourself by such obligations, endeavour, as quickly as possible, by every humble and persuasive method you can think of; nay, struggle as for life, to disengage yourself, by pressing the debtor to pay what he owes, or the creditor to acquit you of your bond.—6–11. Meanwhile, never indulge yourself in sloth, and want of provident care; but learn, from those puny insects the ants, to labour diligently in your calling, and carefully improve every opportunity of honestly providing for yourself and your family; and remember providing for yourself and your family: and remember that, if that inclination to idleness and sloth, so common to mankind, be indulged by you, whether in greater or smaller degrees, unexpected and at last extreme poverty shall irresistibly come upon you.—12-15. Remember too, that it is the property of persons vile and wicked to accustom themselves to profane, blasand wicked to accustom themselves to profane, plasphemous, proud, passionate, lewd, or reproachful discourse, or by signs made with their eyes, feet, or fingers to stir up others to mischief. The heart of such being filled with perverse inclinations, they are perpetually contriving mischief, and stirring up hatred and contention among their neighbours: but suddenly shall their villany and wickedness issue in their irretrievable infamy and ruin. 16-19. And indeed proud looks, lying tongues, murderous hands, hearts given to mischievous contrivances, feet given to a speedy execution of injurious designs, perjured persons, and sowers of discord among friends or neighbours, are distinguished objects of God's indignation.—20-22. Let me therefore again press you to attend to, highly esteem, and carefully practise, those divine instructions which have been tendered to you by your parents. This will be of great use to direct, preserve, and competition in your whole lebour of life. fort you in your whole labours of life. 23, 24. For the law of God, as a lamp, guides in adversity, and, as the light of the sun, directs and comforts in prosperity; and the reproofs of his Word are excellent means of preserving from ruin, and leading to true happiness; are particularly useful to preserve from being deluded by the flattering speeches and enticements of lewd women, those sinks of wickedness and plagues of mankind. 25-29. As you regard your temporal or eternal welfare, never gaze on the beauty or fine attire of such: never let their wanton and enticing looks engage you to the most distant desire after their dangerous em-braces; for if once they insnare you, they will never quit their hold till they have reduced you to extreme beggary, or to a miserable and ignominious death. You may more safely take fire into your bosom, or walk upon burning coals, than intermeddle, however privately or transiently, with a whorish woman, par-ticularly if either party be married. 30-33. If one merely steal to fill his hungry belly, he is not exposed to shame or punishment; and if it be found that he has stolen more, it is only required that he should make complete restitution according to the law, which may perhaps amount to all that he is worth. But he who commits adultery with a woman can have no necessity for it, but acts through mere folly and wickedness, and so exposes himself to the loss of his life by the magistrates, as well as to eternal damnation from the hand of God. He exposes himself to bloody quarrels, and renders himself irrecoverably infamous. And though the civil magistrate should wickedly spare his life, yet it is exposed to the fury of a justly enraged husband, who will regard no penitential submissions or entreaties, and accept no gifts as the ransom of it.

Ver. 1. This is a passage of great practical difficulty. Does it, by implication, altogether forbid the aid of suretiship to friends? This cannot be; for in many instances such suretiship is indispensable. Does it, then, covertly condemn merely such 'rash and inconsiderate engagements as arise from an undue facility of temper, rather than from a deliberate calculation of duty? Such covert insinuation of a principle is inconsistent with the plainness of Scripture. With great deference, the following slight and well warranted change in the translation is suggested:—My son, if thou be surety to thy friend,' see Ge. 24. 54. This makes the object of the passage to be a warning against any neglect of a friend's interest (for which we have become accountable), from any undue presumptuous draft upon his friendship—a most necessary warning: for in practice there are many who will neglect their own interests, and the interests of their best friends, for the self-alt that may result from their attention and liberality to strangers. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Greatly advantageous, even to the outward interests of persons, families, and nations, is an exact obedience to God's commandments. And it is sinful and foolish to ruin our estates or families by engaging for other people's debts: but infamously wicked are those debtors who exert not themselves to the utmost to relieve their sureties. Great care ought to be taken of our outward property. In respect of it we are but God's stewards, and ought to lay it out and bring it in according to his directions. The amazing instinct which God hath given to some animals, and their conduct, shame the slothful of mankind. Such sluggards are very averse to be roused to their work, spiritual or temporal. If one degree of indolence be denied them, they would gradually enjoy a lesser: but poverty in a quick, irresistible, and ruinous manner, comes to such at last. With alarming earnestness do sinners practice injunity and make averagement of the comes to such at last. With alarming earnestness do sinners practise iniquity, and make every power of their soul, or member of their body, instrumental therein. And many things in heart, in lip, in life, are detested by God, which are everlooked as almost innocent by 6 ¶ Hear, for I will speak of excellent things; and the opening of my lips shall be right things.

7 For my mouth shall speak truth; and wickedness is an abomination to my lips.

8 All the words of my mouth are in righteousness; there is nothing 'froward' or perverse in them.

9 They are all plain to him that understandeth, and right to them that find knowledge.

10 ¶ Receive my instruction, and not silver; and knowledge rather than choice gold.

11 For wisdom is better than rubies; and

With what ardent love ought we to regard the | men. word of God as our enlightening instructor and regulating law! It is necessary to receive, retain, and improve it as a powerful mean to preserve us from fleshly lusts, which war against both body and soul. But terrible and fatal snares are the flattering words and looks of whorish and light women. It is impossible to avoid destruction if once we are entangled by them. And it is shocking that so many indulge them-selves in a crime so infamous and destructive.

CHAPTER VII. Ver. 1-5. My dear young friends, let me again press upon your consciences to lay up my let me again press upon your consciences to my up my advices and instructions in your judgment, heart, and memory; and carefully, tenderly, and readily to observe and practise them. Make yourselves familiar with Jesus Christ, and his spiritual instructions, as the most pesus Christ, and his spiritual instructions, as the most powerful means of preservation from the ensaring arts and flatteries of whorish women, which is a privilege of infinite importance. 6-9. For, from my own window I observed a thoughtless young fop sauntering under night in the streets, and in a stately manner walking towards a corner which these infamous strum-pets used to haunt. 10-20. There, one dressed in a light and whorish manner, and extremely skilled in the arts of enticement,—one extremely talkative, ready to brawl with her husband, given to idle visiting, and gadding about to places of dissipation and concourse, —met him, caught him in her arms and kissed him, and in an impudent manner told him that, being a devout lady, she had that very day been offering thank-offerings to God; and being to feast upon her share of the flesh thereof, she had solicitously sought him to take a part of it, and had happily found him;—and that she had decked and perfumed her bed in the most engaging manner—in which they might got all most engaging manner,-in which they might riot all night in exquisite pleasures, without any danger, as the silly fellow called her husband was gone a long journey, had a great deal of business to transact, and the sity reliow caned ner nusuant was gone a long journey, had a great deal of business to transact, and would not return till the full moon. 21–23. Notwithstanding his showing some aversion at first, she, by her fair pretences and flattering speeches, quickly complete the single pretence of religion is made a close and incentive to sin.—Note, And let every Christian note it well: to turn pelled him to follow her, as willingly, and no less stupidly, than an ox goeth to the slaughter, or a madman to the stocks, -never thinking of anything but pleasure, till the enraged husband sheath his sword in his bowels, or the judgments of God accomplish his irretrievable ruin!—24-27. Let me therefore beseech you, my dear young men, whom I unfeignedly regard, you, my dear young men, whom I unleighedly regard, diligently to observe and practise these warnings which I have repeatedly given you. Never indulge the smallest inclination towards such women; never listen to their enticements; never indulge the smallest fellowship or familiarity with such; never hope to be safe in, or to return from, such courses; for many, even of those noted in valour and wisdom, have been totally ruined in reputation, estate, body, and soul by such women; and fellowship with them is the certain road to a miserable death and eternal damnation.

the grace of God into licentiousness is a constant inclination in man, and a constant temptation of Satan. Let believers watch and pray that they follow neither. C. Ver. 18. It is thus that by the misapplication of words, the world, the flesh, and the devil continue to seduce and destroy. Love is an attribute, a name for God himself; yet, under this name, the seducer covers her own perjury, her victim's lewdness, and the disregard and enmity of both to God. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is necessary to love, search, and meditate on God's law day and night; and to make it the constant food of our heart and standard of our life. Then should we find therein the most sanctifying virtue.

Magistrates and ministers should carefully inspect the people committed to their charge! And there is need of frequent and fervent prayers to God for our friends and neighbours, as we know not in what guilt fearful temptations may involve them if not overcome. devil quickly finds business for idle and unseasonable saunterers, especially if young. And when women are once addicted to flaunting, loose, and gaudy apparel, and to wheedling in love matters, and are extremely talkative, and given to an unsettled and dissipated course, it will require no great pains to make harlots of them. Terribly base and impudent these women become who have thrown off the restraints of modesty peculiar to their sex. And sad is the case when husbands and wives are glad to be rid of one another's company. It is shameful, wicked, and ruinous, when Satan and his abominable agents or lusts are, in days of youth, preferred to Jesus Christ and his grace. But fearful and speedy destruction, from the crime itself, or from the hand of God or man, awaits the whorish adulterer. Surely then we should be solicitous to improve the falls and miseries of others, as a warning for us to take heed, lest, in the same thoughtless and inconsiderate manner, we hurry ourselves into everlasting ruin.

CHAPTER VIII. Ver. 1-11. And why, to your ruin, should you listen to the flattering enticements of whorish women, when Jesus Christ, the wisdom of God, by himself and his messengers, in the most open and earnest manner, calls you, and every one of mankind, even the most simple and foolish, to the study of true and spiritual wisdom;—to listen to, consider, and be-lieve the excellent, pure, holy, substantial, faithful, precious, and infinitely useful oracles of his Word: 12-I. And in order to enforce his call, and recommend his instructions, represents himself as the infinitely wise his instructions, represents minimum and prudence; the infinitely Holy One, who detests everything proud, polluted, or perverse;—and the Almighty God, able to luted, or perverse;—and the Almighty God, able to execute all his purposes, and by whose deputed authority all the magistrates on earth govern their subjects; the infinite lover and rich rewarder of all that seek him, particularly in youth;—the inexhaustible portion and unerring guide of all those who receive him by faith:-the eternal and only begotten Son of JEHOVAH, appointed to be our Mediator;—the almighty Maker of all things in heaven and earth;—and who, from his infinite and peculiar love to mankind, took a distinguished pleasure in forming the earth as a theatre. whereon he should appear, save, and hold intimate fellowship with the sons and daughters of Adam. 32-36. On account of all which excellencies and kindness be, in the most earnest and condescending manner, entreats and charges you to hear, receive, and practically observe his instructions, attend his ordinances, and receive himself in them, as the free gift of God, and as the only mean of true and everlasting happiness; will infallibly and eternally ruin yourselves.

Ver. 1. He that would understand this, and similar passages, may consult Is. 11. 2, 3, where he will find the seven gifts of the Spirit enumerated as the endowments of Christ. And as every attribute of God is but a name for his being—so the forth-putting of every separate attribute is but an account of the actings of his being in that special view. Accordingly, 'wisdom and understanding' are here both used as titles of Christ—nuisdom, to indicate his full comprehension of the interests and means of the house of God—understanding,' to indicate his sadequacy to sustain their weight, care, and management. C.

Ver. 5. Ver. 5.

God, Jn. 7. 17. C.

Ver. 12. Prudence implies foresight, forethought, and preparation for coming events. It is an attribute of God, Ep. 1. 8; and, rightly understood, a precious grace of the Spirit in man, Is. 52. 13.—Witty. This word is here used in the sense of ingenious, skilful. To the Spirit of God all human ingeniuty is to be attributed, Ex. 31. 2, 3; the administration of whose gifts are all in the hands of Christ, the eternal Wixdom. C.

Ver. 18. Were further proof required that the Wisdom here speaking is Christ, it would here be furnished: none but he is righteous, Ro. 3. 120; In. 2. 1; none but he has righteousness, Ro. 3. 20; In. 2. 1; none but he has righteousness, REFLECTIONS.—How public, earnest, and extensive are the calls of the gospel! Infinitely excellent is that Jesus Christ and his salvation therein exhibited and offered, and that religion which is therein prescribed. And happy, in the blessings of time and eternity, are those persons, families, and nations in which the knowledge of Christ and his truths prevail and reign! They are enriched with the fruits of his mediation, and filled with all the fulness of God. But is it not infinitely amazing, that God's eternal Son, the Creator and Preserver of all things, should have, from everlasting, entered into the room of, and fixed his thoughts, ing, entered into the room of, and fixed his thoughts, his delights upon, the children of men? Surely then he deserves our strictest attention, our earliest and strongdeserves our strictest attention, our earnest and strong-est affection. And just and righteous is the sorest puni-ishment which can be inflicted upon those self-ruiners who refuse him, and neglect and despise the ordinances of his grace. Let me consider this great Apostle and of his grace. Let me consider this great Apostle and High-priest of my profession, this great ALL and IN ALL. Let my heart seek him early, earnestly, and above all things else. Let me love him, who first loved me, with my whole heart, soul, mind, and strength. Let me rejoice and delight in him as my exceeding joy, and all my consolation. Let me carefully attend his ordinances, watching daily at his gates, at the posts of his doors; and if I find him who is the great God my Saviour, and the eternal life, my pains will be infinitely more than rewarded.

CHAPTER IX. Ver. 1-5. And why enter the ruinous house or cover the ensnaring entertainment of a harlot, when the infinitely wise Jesus Christ, who is made of God unto us wisdom, hath framed, for his fellowship with men, a glorious church on earth and in heaven, fully supported by divine perfections, purposes, oracles, and offices; and hath prepared his own crucified self, his word, ordinances, and eternal felicities,

6-12. Earnestly he admonishes you to avoid all unnecessary intimacy with wicked persons, as you regard your temporal or eternal happiness; as by it you cannot, even in attempting their reformation, justly expect and infamy to yourselves;—and to cultivate familiarity with wise and serious persons, whom you may both profit and be profited by;—and to study true and experimental godliness, as the proper mean to render you truly happy in this world and in that which is to come; and solemnly warns you that you yourselves must reap the inexpressibly important fruits of your attention to or scornful rejection of his instructions.—13-18. And remember, as before God, that nothing more effectually renders men despisers of Christ and his blessings than fellowship with light and lewd women, or false teachers; who, ignorant of everything spiritually good, and extremely talkative, artfully and impudently seduce simple persons, who intend no such thing, to imagine that for-bidden pleasures are peculiarly delightful. And, alas! few of those tempted by them seriously consider, that by such pleasures multitudes have already lost their lives, and are entered into the everlasting torments of Rich are his gospel provisions—his own and church. flesh and blood, nay, all the fulness of God. And free and unencumbered with legal qualifications are his gospel calls. How absurd, insolent, and foolish are the scornful refusers thereof! For certain and just is their aggravated and everlasting ruin. And it is impossible to have fellowship with Christ, in grace or Glory, and yet live in intimacy with wicked men.

There is need of the utmost care, both in giving and taking reproofs. Fidelity in reproofs is the surest evidlearn, nor too good to amend. And they who rage at rebuke prove the weakness of their own understanding, as well as the want of grace. But, alas! what manifold temptations, suited to the taste of our corrupt hearts, are presented to us by Satan and his emissaries. to keep or draw us from Jesus Christ! And too many, through ignorance of and inattention to the danger, comply therewith. But however sweet the pleasures of sin be in the mouth, they are bitter in the belly; they issue in endless torment and anguish.

CHAPTER X. Ver. 1. It is a great comfort to parents to see their children profiting by their instructions and examples, and growing up in wisdom, piety, and virtue. But it is a grief and burden to them when they are foolish, stubborn, and profligate. 2. Ill-gotten riches afford no solid comfort in life, but draw on a wasting or poisoning curse: but Jesus' glorious spiritual or temporal things, particularly in the time of youth, is a mark of true wisdom: but he that slothfully neglects them, brings misery and shame upon himself and his parents. 6. The justified in Christ are, to their everlasting honour and safety, blessed in him with all the blessings of time and eternity: and outward blessings often attend the just and merciful on earth. But their own iniquity shall violently overwhelm and confound those who wickedly defraud and oppress their neighbours. 7. The pious and virtuous shall, at least after death, be remembered with honour and praise, men blessing God for their good named and shall. men blessing God for their good example and useful conversation; but wicked livers shall either be forgotten or remembered with abhorence. 8. They who are truly wise will thankfully receive and practise laws from God or good advices from men: but self-conceited persons, who will not learn of others, but love to hear themselves talk, shall bring themselves into contempt, sin, and misery: nay, into hell. 9. He who in dealing with God and men walks in candour, simplicity, and godly sincerity, is safe under the divine protection in his way to eternal life, and avoids manifold miseries and snares in this world; but he who indulges himself in hypocrisy towards God, and in inconstancy and deceit towards men, shall be detected and made a public reproach. Io. He who under pretence of kind-ness betrays his neighbour, and by signs mocks him or tempts others to injure him, is a common grievance, and shall at last become miserable; but a noisy and hell.

edifying; but nothing but sore afflictions here, or the torments of hell hereafter, can bring obstinate fools to any serious reflection. 14. They who know the value of true wisdom labour to enlarge their knowledge, and to keep it up till they have proper opportunities for using it: but fools rashly blab out what tends to their own or others' ruin. 15. Riches make men confident and secure, and even protect them against manifold injuries in this world; whereas poverty depresses men's spirits, and exposes them to injury and abuse. 16. The industry of the righteous in outward things issues in the comfortable maintenance of himself and others; and his care for his soul issues in life spiritual and eternal: but whatever a wicked man has by inheritance, or by his own acquirement, hardens him in sin, and is abused to gratify his sinful lusts. 17. He is in the way to eternal life who receives, lays up in his heart, and practises the instructions of God's Word, and readily regards advices, and even reproofs, given him by others: but he who neglects to give reproof, encourages men in their mistakes; and he who refuses to take and improve instructions and reproofs, obstinately rushes upon his own destruction. 18. He who conceals his hatred his own destruction. 18. He who conceals his hatred by great professions of friendship before one's face, and he who artfully vents slander behind one's back, is, with all his cunning, an impious fool in God's reckoning, and his wickedness shall be publicly exposed. 19. Even in much speaking there are ordinarily to be found words idle or wicked. It is therefore prudent to be sparing in our words and to consider well both to be sparing in our words, and to consider well both when, and where, and what, and how we speak. 20, 21. Prudent and pious discourse is pure and substantial: it edifies, instructs, and nourishes the hearers: but the heart of the wicked, being only evil, and that continually, is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked; nothing good can proceed from it; but they persist and perish in the devices of their own foolishmess paither beauting per coring to how the way of ness, neither knowing nor caring to know the way of life and peace. 22. It is not men's anxious labour and care that make them rich, either in temporal or spiritual things; but the blessing of God upon their lawful endeavours confers riches, and enables to enjoy them comfortably, without pressure of guilt, tormenting fear, or perplexing care. 23. Senseless sinners take pleasure in, and make a jest of, the most horrid impieties they mischief, and all sporting with it or delighting in it.

24. The miseries which wicked men fear under the awakenings of conscience shall come upon them; and whatever blessings the righteous desire and pray for shall be granted them in due season. 25. However the wicked may bluster for a while, and threaten to over-throw everthing that stands in their way, they quickly and terribly ruin themselves and rush into misery: but and terribly run themselves and rush into misery: but the righteous, being built on Christ the Rock of Ages, and fixed in piety and virtue, stand fast for ever. No storm can shake their confidence, or deprive them of their durable and immovable felicity. 26. As vinegar sets the teeth on edge, and smoke is evacatious to the eyes, so sluggish, negligent, and dilatory persons vex and provoke them who send or employ them in any important business. 27. A religious observation important business. 27. A religious observance of God's laws, and preserving of our body in temperance, soberness, and chastity, tends to prolong our life: but wickedness of itself, and by God's righteous judgments on account of it, brings on diseases, and hastens the sinner to his grave and to hell. 28. The hope of the godly, founded on Jesus' promise and blood, brings delight and satisfaction to the soul, and issues in everlasting felicity. but the hore of the middle of the soul of t delight and satisfaction to the soul, and issues in ever-lasting felicity; but the hope of the wicked shall issue in disappointment and eternal misery. 29. Upright walking in Christ, and the exercising of piety and virtue, increase a person's strength for duty and courage in it: but the workers of iniquity shall be plagued with terrors and overwhelmed in misery. 30. Nothing so establishes persons or families in a relation to Christ as their righteousness, and a course of piety, justice, and mercy: but the wicked, however successful they may be for a time, shall never be able to fix themselves in their prosperity, but be rooted out from the enjoyment

31. The godly, out of the good treasure of their heart, bring forth good discourse, which tends to make the hearers wise unto salvation: but he that uses his the hearers wise unto salvation: but ne that uses nistongue to abuse, cozen, or raise dissension, or to blaspheme God and spread error, shall, in the end, have it silenced in hell. 32. The righteous know, and accustom themselves to speak things truly useful and edifying; but the wicked abandon their lips to falsehood, flattery, fraud, and calumny, or such like subtle but detectable arts of doing wischief but detestable arts of doing mischief.

hood, flattery, fraud, and calumny, or such like subtle but detestable arts of doing mischief.

Ver. I. This is the commencement of the second great division of the book. It is different in structure from the first division. The latter is made up of parables and proverbs of considerable length; while the former consists wholly of brief, pointed sentences, each of which consists generally of two antithetical members, embodying one idea. Most of them are figurative, being based on some comparison, both in language and in idea. It is probable that, though all these proverbial sayings were at one time or another uttered by Solomon, yet most of them were of much older date. His diligent study had made him familiar with the wisdom of the ancients, and his powerful memory retained it. In the end he either wrote the proverbs out himself under divine guidance, or he employed others to do so. Most of these proverbs are examples of antithetic parallelism, the second clause containing the contrast to the first. Each verse is, as a rule, complete in itself, and embodies a perfectly intelligible sentiment. There is in each a truth clearly and sharply enunciated, and a lesson which is almost forced upon the heart. P.

And such blessings, spiritual, 'the just,' the justified by faith, enjoy in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, Ep. 1. 3—even the blessings of the election of grace, the adoption of children, the pardon of sin, acceptance in the Beloved, inseparable union with their exalted Head, the revelation of grace, and the eternal inheritance of unfading glory. C.

Ver. 20. The way of the Lord is Jesus manifested in prophecy, in types, in flesh, or by the Spirit; and he is strength to the faith, patience, and zeal of the upright—the men who stand upright, because they stand in a Redeemer's righteousness. C.

CHAPTER XI. Ver. 1. All manner of injustice and fraud is extremely hateful and detestable to God, the governor of the world: but strict equity in the whole of our commerce one with another is highly leasing to him. 2. Haughty conceit of ourselves, and insulting of others, draws along with it the utmost con-tempt and disgrace; both God and men take pleasure to mortify and expose the proud; but such as, having to morthly and expose the product but such as, having learned of Christ, live under a deep sense of their own weakness and unworthiness, find favour with men and acceptance with God.

3. When men sincerely practise what God has revealed to them, they may expect his pirit to direct them in their duty and to their eternal felicity: but the obstinate adherence of sinners to their own lusts and imaginations, and their opposition to Christ and his laws, shall hurry them into certain and everlasting destruction. 4. Riches, heaped up by extortion or covetousness, are of no avail to deliver us from the wrath of God, or even the rage of men, when the time of punishment is come: but righteousness hath a promise of life annexed to it; it prevents those sins which would expose us to God's judgments or man's punishments; it secures against the sting of temporal, and prevents eternal death. 5, 6. Being made right-eous in Christ, and sanctified by his grace, and study-ing a sincere and impartial observance of God's laws, are effectual means to secure direction in duty and deliverance from evil; but the wicked shall perish by those very impious and evil courses by which they hoped to secure or exalt themselves. 7. In death wicked men find all their projects and hopes utterly destroyed. Whatever they thought to accomplish by destroyed. Whatever they inlogal to accomprise to their riches, their power, or their friends, perishes together with them, while they themselves launch forth into eternal misery. 8. The righteous are frequently in an unexpected manner delivered from their perplexation of the right of the right with the residual with a property of the right of the right of the right of the right with the right of the righ ing troubles; and the wicked, who perhaps brought them into them, are plunged into those very miseries them into them, are plunged into those very misers themselves. 9. By flatteries, false doctrines, and artful seductions, hypocrites draw their neighbours into sin, and thereby into ruin. But through knowledge of Christ and his Word shall the righteous be guarded against their wiles, and preserved from the destruction which they intended. It is matter of general gladitations with a single gold gold ware proper and are adress when wise and godly men prosper and are advanced, because they use their power and wealth for the benefit of all around them; and great is the joy when wicked men, who, as plagues and curses where they dwell, corrupt their manners, and draw down the wrath of God upon them, are cut off. 11. By God's blessing upon the upright, and by their prayers, advices, and kindness, all around them are profited: but the wicked, by their blasphemies, errors, evil counsels, and maxims, corrupt men's manners, and ruin their welfare. 12. It is common for self-conceited fools to despise their neighbours, to reproach them as weak, or to render them ridiculous; but a prudent man, whatever he thinks, avoids speaking to the reproach of others; as, beside the wickedness of contemning others, none is so mean as to be insensible of it, or incapable of finding means of resentment. 13. They who make a trade of carrying tales from one to another, never stick at treacherously discovering the secrets which have been intrusted to them; but a faithful friend conceals, not only what has been intrusted to him, but everything else that could tend to his neighbour's prejudice. 14.

Where prudent counsel is wanting, nations and private affairs go to wreck: but where many wise counsellors unite in their deliberations, every precaution will be taken, every danger prevented, and the most proper methods used to insure success. 15. He who stands bound for the debts of another man, especially one whose ability and honesty are unknown to him, is in great danger to be ruined in his estate: and the way to be secure in that point is to avoid and hate all such engagements. 16. Remarkable and increasing grace and virtue in a woman will engage affection and respect when all other accomplishments fade and decline; and strong men hold fast the wealth which they have acquired. the wealth which they have acquired. 17. He wild is kind and bountiful to others, secures to himself a gracious reward from God: but he who is covetous, hard-hearted, and cruel, brings trouble on himself and his relations. 18. Whatever wicked men do to render themselves rich, easy, or honoured, will disappoint their expectation; but they who exercise themselves in true piety and virtue, shall infallibly obtain the blessed reward of their works in time and eternity. 19. As holiness and virtue promote true happiness here and hereafter, so the more eagerly a man pursues an evil course, the more is he bent upon his own destruction. 20. Hypocrites, who live in enmity and opposition to God and his law, while they pretend much piety, kindodious to him: but they who, being renewed by his grace, walk before him in truth, equity, simplicity, and godly sincerity, are, and shall for ever be, the objects of his special favour and delight. 21. Though wicked men should do their utmost attempt to strengthen themselves by leagues and associates, they shall never be capable of protecting themselves from the just punishmen of their sin: but the righteous, and often their children for their sakes, though deserted of all men, shall be delivered by God himself from everything ruinous. 22. As a golden jewel is very ill placed in the snout of a swine, which is still routing in mires and dunghills; so beauty is ill bestowed upon a woman who, void of good sense, modesty, and virtue, loves to employ herself in perpetual talkativeness, and wallow in 1092 filthy lusts and whorish pleasures. 23. The righteous habitually desire, and shall obtain, solid and substantial blessings to themselves and others; but wicked men wish for mischief on others, and hope to execute their wish for mischief on others, and hope to execute their wrath and malice upon them; which in the end will only bring more fearful and lasting ruin upon themselves. 24, 25. They who, from a right principle, are remarkably liberal to the poor and to pious institutions, shall find their stock proportionably increased for their real advantage; and while they refresh and support others with their bounty, God shall reward them with prosperity of soul, in grace or comfort, or even with the enjoyments of this present world: but the pinching hand of avarice prevents enjoyment, or brings down the curse of God upon our substance. 26. He who, in a time of scarcity, hoards up corn to raise the price, shall be hated and cursed by mankind: but good wishes and commendations from men, and blessings from God, shall attend him who then opens his granaries and sells it at a moderate price. 27. He who earnestly sets himself to contrive and do good to others, shall obtain favour with God and men: but he who makes mischief his business shall draw upon himself the evil which he designs against his neighbour. 28. He that anxiously grasps for, and trusts in, riches as his surest support and defence, shall find them a broken reed to pierce him through with many sorrows, and shall fall to decay as withered leaf: but the righteous, who are united to a withered lear: but the righteous, who are thince to Christ by faith, and walk in all holy and just conversa-tion, shall receive, out of his fulness, abundant supplies of quickening and fructifying grace, and shall thrive and prosper in their concerns. 29. He who by his passion, prodigality, covetousness, and ambition troubles his family, may for a time make a great bustle and stir, but it will issue in disappointment, disgrace, and pov-erty; and the fool, who knows not how to manage, and who lives without thought, shall be reduced to want, and forced to serve, if not sell himself to, a wiser neighbour. 30. A good man's graces, prayers, instructions, and examples are a mean of quickening, com-fort, and prosperity to others around: and he that by instruction, prayer, or the like, draws men from Satan to the knowledge, faith, and obedience of Christ, shows forth true and heavenly wisdom. 31. If God will not pass his own favourites without proper correction for their sins in this world, who can justly expect that the obstinate and contemptuous breakers of his law shall escape the just punishment of their many crimes?

Ver. 3. Integrity literally signifies entireness. The love of God, united with the love of our neighbour—and that measured by the love of self—constitutes this entireness, this completeness of principle, which guides the believer in every way, however dark, intricate, or dangerous; and never is acquired by man as a sinner, but by the revelation of the love of God in Christ, which constrains him first to love God, and then his neighbour as him-

Ver. 9. This fact was awfully exemplified by the scribes and Ver. 9. This fact was awfully exemplined by the Scribes and Pharisees, that 'generation of vipers, hypocrites,' by whom speedy and terrible vengeance was brought down upon the nation whom they deceived. C. Ver. 10. In the multitude, &c. This is a proverb frequently perverted, as if it meant, that in the multitude of talkers and epinions there was safety—whereas counsellors, in the scriptural sense, are those who, being filled with the Spirit of God, which is a Spirit of counsel, Is 11. 2, are 'wise to win souls,' and to lead men to Christ, the only refuge of sinners. C.

Ver. 21. This verse is generally interpreted of the confederacies of wicked men, ratified by hand joining in hand, as a manner of swearing. The interpretation of the judicious Brown Paterson, 'from hand to hand,' from one generation to another, seems greatly preferable, as in strict conformity with the following clause. C.

Ver. 22. Personal beauty is one of the gifts of God, and, like all his other gifts, may be employed for his glory and the good of the creature upon whom it is bestowed. But to this end it must be guided by discretion—a judgment formed in the light of divine truth on the origin and fading nature of the gift, and the accountability of the possessor for its use or abuse. Without this discretion, it is but like a costly ornament bestowed upon the swine, which degrades it by its unclean propensities—and 'returns, even from being washed, to its wallowing in the mire.' C.

Ver. 29. He that troubleth his own house, &c. This proverb is mainly directed to those who can govern their tongue and temper in public, but who lay aside this restraint, and forget 'the law of kindness' in their own houses. They shall inherit the wind—calms uncertain, and the storms destructive. C.

CHAPTER XII. Ver. 1. He who loves reproofs, advices, and instructions, will become wise and intelligent; but he who declines, hates, and is enraged at rebukes for his faults, is under the power of his brutish passions; and there is little hope that he will ever know or act like a man. 2. The man who, being united to Christ, is clothed with his righteousness, and sanctified by his grace, and deals kindly and bountifully with others, shall be more and more favoured and blessed of God: but he whose thoughts are bent on wickedof God; but he whose thoughts are bent on wickedness shall be condemned to suffer the just punishment of his iniquity. 3. No man, however subtle or powerful, shall be able to establish his own or his family's greatness by wicked methods: but the righteous, being rooted and grounded in the rock Christ, though shaken by manifold storms of trouble, shall remain unmovable by manifold storms of trouble, small remain unmovable in a flourishing state. 4. A pious, prudent, active, chaste, and affectionate wife is a singular ornament and honour to her husband: but one that is graceless, lazy, foolish, prodigal, peevish, boisterous, and wanton, shames him when abroad, and torments him at home and, like an incurable disease, vexes his heart, hastens him to his grave, wastes his substance, and ruins his family. 5. The thoughts and designs of good men are managed with piety, equity, candour, and truth; but the contrivances of the wicked are carried on with fraud, dissimulation, and falsehood. 6. Wicked men, by their consultations with one another, and by their by their consultations with one another, and by their reproach and perjury, study to undo their opposers; but they who are sincerely good will labour, by their advice, testimony, recommendation, or request, to deliver such innocent persons from their snares. 7. God himself not only defeats the ruinous projects of the made but totally destroys and extirpates them and wicked, but totally destroys and extirpates them and their families: whereas he continues and establishes the persons, properties, and families of the just. 8. Not earthly science, honour, or riches, but spiritual wisdom, and a prudent management of his affairs, by fair and honest means, will render a man highly and lastingly honoured, and commended of God and of all good men. but he who indulges his obstinate corrup-tions, hates and opposes his duty, and labours by wicked means to accomplish his ends, shall bring himself into present and everlasting contempt. 9. Far happier is he who, making no pompous show in the world, lives within the bounds of his income, though the world. should hardly afford him a single servant, than he who shows away with a great deal of elegance, equipage, and attendants, when he can hardly get necessary subsistence, without running into debt, or some other shameful and miserable shift. 10. Good men have implanted in their hearts a tender concern for the welfare and life of the brute animals, much more for that of their servants and neighbours: but the nature of the wicked is so cruel, that the very kindnesses which they affect to show are maliciously designed and ruinous. 11. Diligent industry in lawful callings shall, through the blessing of God, afford men a competent portion of temporal things; but idleness and bad company mark a man foolish, and lead him into desperate, impover-ishing, and ruinous courses. 12. Wicked men desire, approve, and practise deceitful arts for ruining others, wish to be secure in so doing: but the piety and and wish to be secure in so doing; but the piety and justice from which righteous men's actions proceed, bring forth glory to God, maintenance and blessings to themselves, and much benefit and advantage to others around. 13. Wicked men are often brought into trouble by their own rash speeches, treasons, perjuries, lies, and calumnies: but the righteous, by the providence of God, and even by their prudent discourse, avoid and escape from many difficulties, in which otherwise they had been entangled. 14 A man shall receive abundant blessings from God, as the reward of that good which has been done by his prove and professible discourse. he has done by his pious and profitable discourses or works.

15. Fools are so self-conceited, that they conworks. 15. roots are so sen-concerted, that they consult nobody, but hold right whatever they think or do themselves: but wise men. distrusting their own judgment and abilities, wisely ask and take advice or instruction of others. 16. Fools, having no command of their passions, are no sooner provoked, than rage and fury appear in their countenance, words, and actions; but prudent persons conceal that displeasure which would tend to their disgrace, and overlook the shame-ful provocation given them, rather than dishonour themselves by resenting it. 17. He who, especially when called to be a witness, boldly and freely speaks the truth, and nothing else, shows himself an honest man and does into the contract to the contract of the contract o by false accusations, calumnies, and bitter reproaches, wound the reputations, spirits, or estates of their neighbours, and make discords and divisions among them: but good men, by their prudent speeches, will labour to heal men's reputations, compose their disputes, and comfort and edify their souls. 19. Constant adherence to strict truth in his speeches establishes a man's credit, and what he cave can never be disproved that a light and what he says can never be disproved; but a liar, though he may be at first believed, is soon after found out and confuted; and he is moreover apt to contradict bit and confident and he is inforced apt to contradict himself, and blast his reputation for ever. 20. They who plot mischief shall, to their great vexation, be disappointed in their expectations, and even fall into that evil which they intended for others; but they who by their counsels labour to promote the piety, peace, and happiness of others, shall have lasting joy and comfort for their reward. 21. Let the wicked plot as they will, nothing shall befall the righteous, but what tends to their spiritual and eternal advantage; but the wicked shall be suite outside with invested pleases and shall be quite overwhelmed with inward plagues and outward calamities. 22. Lies and liars are remarkably hated and abhorred of God; but they who, in their speeches and whole conduct, act in truth, fidelity, and candour, are beloved, and shall be blessed by him. 23. A prudent man conceals the knowledge he has, except when called by Providence to use it for the benefit of others, and even then makes no boasting ostentation of it; but a fool, through thoughtlessness, rashness, er ambition to be esteefned wise, proclaims his own weak-ness and ignorance. 24. Diligent and prudent activity in honest callings is the way to obtain riches, honour, and authority; but laziness and villany render men poor and enslaved. 25. Anxious cares about the things of this world, griefs for disappointments and troubles, convictions of sin, and fears of hell, depress the most magnanimous spirit, and make it to pore disconsolate over its wretchedness: but good instruction and advice from friends, and especially the promises of God power-fully applied, revive and make it glad. 26. In his state of union with Christ, justification and adoption, in his inward graces, and his exercises of holiness, and in his abundant happiness, a righteous man is more excellent than his neighbour; but the way that the wicked takes to render himself great or happy only deceives and disappoints him, and issues in misery. 27. Lazy wretches cannot endure to prosecute their own schemes wretches cannot endure to prosecute their own schemes for obtaining earthly enjoyments; or what they have deceitfully obtained never affords them any real comforts, but, as it were, slips through their fingers, or rots at their side, or is taken from them: but the wealth is the standard by an house diligence. themselves by resenting it. 17. He who, especially when called to be a witness, boldly and freely speaks the truth, and nothing else, shows himself an honest man, and does justice to his neighbours: but he who conceals truth, forges lies, or attests falsehoods, shows himself a deceifful and mischievous villain. 18. CHAPTER XIII.

WISE^a son heareth his father's instruction:

- 2 As man shall eat good by the fruit of his mouth: but the soul of the transgressors shall eat violence.1
- 3 Hee that keepeth his mouth keepeth his life: but he that openeth wide his lips shall have destruction.
 - 4 The soul of the sluggard desireth, and piety or virtue that tends to make a man miserable.

Ver. 14. The fruit of his mouth. A word of instruction, reproof, comfort, or kindness is sure to be, sooner or later, in some form repaid—and though never acknowledged by the world, will not be forgotten of God. In another sense also the proverb is fulfilled: the man who establishes a character for truth and intelligence, is sure to find his remuneration in character and employment, ver. 17, 19. C.

Ver. 21. No evil. No real, permanent evil. Troubles, pains, and even distresses, he may feel, but there is nothing really evil that is not superseded by the enjoyment of eternal blessedness. C.

Ver. 26. More excellent. More successful' (A. Williams). But as there is none righteous but Jesus, Ro. 3, 10, 22, the words either describe him who is 'fairer than the sons of men,' or the man who is made righteous by fixih in Jesus, and whose excellency lies in the imputation of righteousness, and the renewal of his nature by the power of his Spirit. C.

CHAPTER XIII. Ver. 1. Wise children will reverently receive, obey, and submit to their parents' instructions, advices, and corrections; but there is no instructions, advices, and corrections; but there is no hope of him who laughs and scoffs when he is admonished or chidden for his faults. 2. He who lays himself out in instructing, advising, and comforting others, or in other edifying discourse, shall be regarded by men and rewarded by God: but evil speakers shall be forced to endure abose miseries which they brought there are fully bridge his torque. rpon others. 3. He that carefully bridles his tongue, thinks well before he speaks, and takes heed to utter nothing improper or unseasonable, preserves himself from much trouble and danger: but he who is extremely talkative, throwing out everything that comes into his head, is in the ready way to be ruined, both by God and by man. 4. Nothing, neither riches, nor learning, nor honour, nor happiness, is to be gotten by mere sluggish desires, without diligent endeavours; but they who, in a dependence upon God, industriously use proper means, shall have sufficiency of outward things, and abundant comforts in Christ, both here and here 5. A righteous man not only carefully avoids but hates, all manner of falsehood in heart, word, and deed; but a wicked man continues to impose upon others, till his detected falsehoods and villanies render him evidently odious to God and detested by men, as a stinking carcass; and so contemptible that he dare not show his face for shame. 6. They who have Jesus' sacrificial life in them, and his grace accepted by them, and who study uprightness and equity in their whole conduct, shall be preserved sound in the faith, steadfast in the obedience of the gospel, unmoved by Satan's temptations or the world's frowns or smiles; but the wicked man, and all his wicked contrivances, shall be overthrown by their own iniquity.

7. Some, in their pride and vanity, make a great show of wealth, wisdom, or grace, when they are worth nothing: while others, by their garb or their speeches, conceal their abundant riches, knowledge, or grace. 8. Riches are so far from rendering men truly happy, that they tempt others to rob or accuse them, that their lives may be saved by huge sums of money; whereas the poor is reckoned so inconsiderable, that nobody thinks it worth while to rob, accuse, or even rebuke him. 9. The holiness, comfort, and prosperity of the righteous continues in its brightness and glory: but the small appearance of comfort and happiness which the wicked enjoy in this world will quickly be extinguished in endless misery. 10. Pride is the principal, and often the sole, cause of quarrels and contentions, and of the continuance of them: the opinionated cannot bear contradiction; the aspiring, a rival; the selfwilled, opposition: but they who piously consult their God and their Bible, and prudently advise with their discreet neighbours, transact things in quietness and peace. 11. Wealth gotten by fraud, gaming, theft, oppression, or the like, having the curse of God upon it, shall quickly be wasted: but that which is gotten by honest industry and diligence shall carried. by honest industry and diligence shall continue and increase. 12. The delay of that which a man eagerly expects renders his mind very uneasy; but when he enjoys what he long desired and looked for, it is sweet, enjoys what he long desired and looked lot, it is sweet, satisfactory, and reviving. 13. He who despises God's word, or the advices of his faithful friends, shall quickly be ruined: but he who reverently submits himself to and obeys God's commandments shall be rewarded. 14. The instructions of a good man, and much more the doctrines of God's Word, refresh, comfort, and enliven the soul, and preserve from those pernicious principles and destructive practices by which many are insnared. 15. A prudent, pious, and regular behaviour is most amiable and acceptable to all men: but the behaviour of lawless and wicked persons, like a rough way, is very ruinous to themselves, and offensive to God and good men. 16. Prudent persons undertake nothing but with due deliberation, and what they understand: and manage their affairs with know-ledge and discretion: but fools discover their weakness, by rashly meddling with matters out of their reach.

17. Unfaithfulness in discharging his trust, or deliver-17. Unauthruiness in discharging his trust, of derivering his message, will bring a wicked servant, ambassador, or minister into shame, condemnation, and misery: but he who acts faithfully procures safety and advantage both to his master and himself.

19. It is a high satisfaction to enjoy what we desire, especially Lath nothing: but the soul of the diligent shall be made fat.

- 5 Ah righteous man hateth lying: but a wicked man is loathsome, and cometh to shame.
- 6 Righteousness, keepeth him that is upright in the way: but wickedness overthroweth the sinner.2
- 7 Therek is that maketh himself rich, yet hath nothing:3 there is that maketh himself poor, yet hath great riches.
- 8 The ransom of a man's life are his riches: but the 'poor heareth not rebuke.
- 9 The light of the righteous rejoiceth: but the lamp⁵ of the wicked shall be put out.
- 10 Only by pride cometh contention: but with the well-advised is wisdom.
- 11 Wealth gotten by vanity shall be diminished: 'but he that gathereth by labour' shall
- 12 Hope deferred maketh the heart sick: but when the desire cometh, it is a tree of life.7
- 13 Whoso* despiseth the word shall be destroyed: but he that feareth the commandment shall be rewarded.8
- 14 The law of the wise is a fountain of life, to depart from the snares of death.
- 15 Gooda understanding giveth favour: but the way of transgressors is hard.
- 16 Every prudent man dealeth with knowledge: but a fool slayeth open his folly.

hate to forsake their lusts and sinful practices, even as means of receiving the choicest benefits. 22. By gaining his estate in a just and upright manner, and by doing good with it while he lives, and by earnest instruction of and fervent prayers for his family, a good man takes the surest course to fix his estate upon them for many generations, but the gippen leases for many generations: but the sinner leaves a curse entailed upon his wealth: and, by the righteous providence of God, it is quickly transferred from his family to one that is truly pious and virtuous. 23. Poor men, by their diligent labour and industry, many times abundantly provide for themselves and family, and even grow rich; while others, who are rich, are reduced even grow rich; while others, who are rich, are reduced to poverty, through their ignorance, rashness, injustice, oppression, deceit, &c. 24. That fond affection which restrains parents from duly correcting their children when they do amiss, is a real and ruinous hatred, a sinful withholding from them a mean, appointed by God, for their amendment and happiness: but parents who truly love their children will study, by early and Christian corrections, to prevent their fixing in evil habits or customs. 25. A righteous man never wants satisfaction, because his desires are moderate, and he lives in a temperate use of God's blessings: and he lives in a temperate use of God's blessings; God gives him a competency, a heart to use it, and contentment in it: but wicked men, insatiable in their desires, and extravagant in the abuse of their plenty, shall be indigent in the midst of abundance, or reduced to the distresses of poverty.

Ver. 6. Righteousness. Not his own nghteousness, for that has no existence beyond the name, Ro. 3. 10; but the 'righteousness of God which is, by faith of Jesus Christ, unto all, and upon all them that believe,' Ro. 3. 22. C.

Ver. 7. Maketh himself poor.' A man may, in the natural sense, 'make himself poor,' as in educating and providing for his family, and thereby he is made truly rich. He may also make himself goor make himself good works.' In To. 8. But, in the spiritual sense, the passage is most completely verified; for the man that, by grace, 'maketh himself poor in spirit,' is, in return, enriched with possession of the kingdom of heaven, Mat. 5. 2. Ver. 8. The poor heareth not returk. The poor in the world, and the poor in spirit, are like some humble plant, in a valley far below the storms of the higher regions; they hear them not. The

He that would accomplish good, must often pass 'through bad report,' and labour after his object with much self-denial—but Providence will repay him in the end with the sweet satisfaction of good attained, as well as intended. But fools will never sacrifice present indulgence for future hopes; self-denial, repentance, and godliness are their 'abomination'—'their god is their belly—their end is destruction,' Ph. 3.3. C.

CHAPTER XIV. Ver. 1. A virtuous wife, by her CHAPTER XIV. Ver. I. A virtuous wife, by her piety, prudence, good economy, and the like, supports and advances her family in honour, happiness, and wealth: but a wicked imprudent wife, by her pride, prodigality, idleness, carelessness, or otherwise, will quickly reduce a happy family to poverty, disgrace, and ruin. 2. By a universal regard to piety and virtue, men manifest the fear and holy reverence of God implanted in their heart: but by an obstinate rebellion against his laws, and eager study to gratify their sinful lusts and passions, they discover their profane contempt of his Majesty. 3. The insolent, calumniating, and contemptuous speeches of proud men are very injurious and wounding to others, and often at last prove a scourge wounding to others, and often at last prove a scourge to themselves: but the prudent, peaceable, and pleas-ing words of wise men, neither offending God nor men, secure them in safety. 4. They who would have plenty must be content with the dirt that labour makes; or if the tillage of the fields be neglected, famine must follow; but laborious tillage will issue in great plenty. 6. Proud self-conceited scoffers at what is holy and serious are never like to profit by their studies, or to come to the knowledge of divine truth; whereas they who humbly, and dependently on God, apply themselves to search out truth, quickly attain to the knowledge of whatever is necessary and useful. 7. It is proper to flee from the company of such persons as discover the corruption of their heart in the vanity or wickedness of their words.

8. Prudent men chiefly study to know how to act in their own calling and religious course; but wicked men employ their knowledge and wit to deceive others. 9. Insensible of the evil, malignity, and danger of sin, wicked men harden themselves in it, please themselves with their own and other reviews. with their own and other men's sins, sport themselves in the commission or recollection thereof, and so proin the commission or recollection thereof, and so provoke God to wrath against them; but they who are afraid of, hate, and avoid sin, truly love and regard their neighbours, and obtain favour with God and man.

10. No one can know what another inwardly suffers in worldly griefs and vexations, or in troubles of conscience; neither can they share with him in his inward joys, particularly those of a spiritual nature.

11. The stately houses, wealthy and honoured families of the wicked, shall in wrath be reduced to ruin and misery. stately houses, weatiny and nonoured families of the wicked, shall in wrath be reduced to ruin and misery, and their hopes of eternal happiness issue in everlasting despair; whereas the poor and unsettled family of the truly pious shall flourish and become illustrious.

12. There is need strictly and impartially to try courses 12. There is need strictly and impartially to try courses and customs: for prejudice, self-flattery, affected ignorance, and the like, make many things seem lawful and good which are really sinful and ruinous. 13. Immoderate joys and pleasures are ordinarily mingled with and issue in inward vexation and anguish: and the diverting of inward convictions and important duties by carpal migh will quickly issue in the wearings and by carnal mirth will quickly issue in the weepings and wailings of eternal despair. 14. He who even in heart revolts from God and his ways, shall be fearfully overrevoits from God and his ways, shall be tearnuly over-whelmed with the punishment of his sin; but a good man, who steadfastly cleaves to the Lord, shall enjoy great comfort in the testimony of a good conscience, and in keeping God's commands. 15. Weak half-witted persons believe every idle story and plausible pretence, and thereby are drawn into evil: but prudent men examine things before they trust to them or pracmen examine tinings before they trust to them or practise them. 16. A wise man, when warned of his error or danger, fears to displease God or to provoke his wrath, and immediately starts back from the sin to which he was tempted, or in which he had involved himself: but a fool rages against those that reprove himself: Dut a 1001 rages against those that reprove, warn, or threaten him, and goes on resolutely in sin, fearless of any danger. 17. He who is soon angry involves himself in rash and imprudent words and actions, for which he is to be pitied: but a man who conceals

20 The poor is hated even of his own neighbour: but the rich hath many friends.4

21 Heh that despiseth his neighbour sinneth: but he that hath mercy on the poor, happy is he.

22 Doi they not err that devise evil? but mercy and truth shall be to them that devise good.

23 In all labour there is profit: but the talk of the lips tendeth only to penury.5

24 The crown of the wise is their riches: but the foolishness of fools is folly.6

25 Ao true witness delivereth souls: but a deceitful witness speaketh lies.

26 Inp the fear of the LORD is strong confidence; and his children shall have a place of refuge.

27 Theq fear of the LORD is a fountain of life, to depart from the snares of death.

28 In the multitude of people is the king's honour: but in the want of people is the destruction of the prince.

29 Hes that is slow to wrath is of great understanding: but he that is hasty of spirit exalteth folly.

30 At sound heart is the life of the flesh; but envy the "rottenness of the bones.

31 He* that oppresseth the poor reproacheth his Maker:8 but he that honoureth him hath mercy on the poor.

32 The wicked is driven away in his wickedness: but the righteous hath hope in his death.

33 Wisdom* resteth in the heart of him that his wrath, and deliberately contrives how to take a cruel revenge, deserves to be hated and abhorred. 18. Inconsiderate sinners hold fast their wickedness, and delight in it, as their portion and inheritance, till they feel the woful effects of it: but the prudent, to their remarkable honour and influence, increase in spiritual understanding. 19. Even in this world the wicked are often obliged to stoop and submit to the righteous, and implore their favour and relief: and at the last day, the debasement of the wicked, and exaltation of the righteous, shall be complete. 20. If a man fall into poverty, his neighbours, who once professed great riendship, will forsake and disregard him: but if a man grow rich, many, who before took no notice of him, will pretend great affection to him, and even the greatest will offer him their favour. 21. He who over-looks and contemns his poor neighbour provokes God to punish and render him miserable: but he who compassionately relieves the poor shall be blessed by God on that account. 22. They who contrive mischief against their innocent neighbours miss their end and ruin themselves: but they who study to do men real good shall be graciously and faithfully rewarded by God. 23. Industrious labour in any lawful calling will 23. Industrious labour in any lawful calling will bring in some gain: but talkativeness and proud boasting tend only to make men beggars. 24. Riches are a singular ornament and advantage to wise men who know how to use them, because thereby they have the greater opportunities of doing good: but riches only render foolish men's folly the more notorious, because they have thereby the greater opportunities of doing mischief and wickedness. 25. An upright witness will, at all hazards, avow the truth, to save the lives or characters of such as are falsely accused: but deceitful men will boldly pour forth lies and calumnies to destroy the innocent. 26. They that fear God may be confident of his protection to themselves and their posterity in times of danger. 27. A holy regard to God, and obedience to his law, will issue in men's solid and eternal comfort, and preserve them from those sinful courses in which many are ensnared to their own de-28. Kings ought to cherish their subjects; struction. for on their number, wealth, and power, their own honour depends; and if they be wasted by unnecessary wars, or forced by oppression into other countries, it will prove the ruin of the kingdom. 29. He who under great provocations can maintain a calmness of temper, discovers much wisdom and grace: but he who is hastily inflamed by reproaches and ill-usage, exposes his corruption and folly, and makes it apparent to every one. 30. Nothing more conduces to health and happiness than a mind renewed by God's Spirit, freed from the dominion of sinful lusts, quiet, gentle, and con-tented: but envy, and such like fretful passions, tor-ment men's spirits, waste their bodies, and hasten them towards hell and the grave. 31. He that defrauds or oppresses the poor, or withholds the relief which their circumstances require, forgets and even practically blasphemes God who makes them poor, and engages himself to defend and relieve them: but he who hath any due respect to God will show pity to the poor, and labour to supply them. 32. In death the wicked is suddenly and irresistibly driven away from all his beloved hopes and enjoyments in his sinful state; and often, in the very act of sin, and always on account of it, into everlasting misery: but the righteous, being united to Christ, clothed with his righteousness, and sanctified by his indwelling Spirit, has, even in trouble and death, well-grounded hopes of eternal felicity. 33. Prudent men study to grow in grace, and in the knowledge of Christ, without making unseasonable or ostentatious demonstrations of it: but foolish men expose themselves by their eager desire to vent their minds in every company. 34. Religion and virtue, equity and kindness, through the blessing of God, inequity and kindness, through the dessing of God, increase the glory, power, and wealth of a nation: but rebellion against God, or injuring of mankind, disgraces and ruins societies.

35. A prudent, active, and faithful minister of state cannot but be dear to a wise king: and one who by his ill management disgraces his government, and brings all things into confusion, cannot but be the object of his wrath.

Ver. 1. The wise woman, by her prudence and management, godly example, and instruction, raises her family either in riches or character, or both; while the foolish, by her vanity, extravagance, and neglect, brings ruin upon herself, her husband, and her children. This truth applies to churches as well as to familiae.

gance, and neglect, brings ruin upon nerseil, ner nuspano, and her children. This truth applies to churches as well as to families. C.

Ver. 6. Those that would not strive, Lu. 13. 24, 25, and the 'foolish virgins' who neglected, Mat. 25. 8-17, all sought to enter and were refused. The first, because they did not strive; and when forced to come near, they still stood without, and would not enter by Christ the door, Jn. 10. 9; and the 'foolish virgins' came without light,' untout Christ 'the true light,' Jn. 14. 9, and were therefore justly rejected and condemned, Jn. 3. 19. C. Ver. 12. If a man judge by temporal advantages, and not by eternal interests—if he follow human authority in preference to divine truth—if he obey the impulse of passion instead of reason and conscience, all his ways will seem right when seen by these false lights, but their seeming will not change their nature—they all terminate in spiritual and eternal death. C.

Ver. 14. A good man shall be satisfied from himself, as a branch bearing fruit by its own power; but from himself, as a branch in Christ the living vine, and bearing all his fruit because of this union, Jn. 15. 5; not from himself as a mine, natively producing silver, gold, or gems; but from himself as an earthen vessel which God has enriched with his heavenly treasures, 2 Co. 4. 7. C.

47. C. Ver. 19. The evil bow before the good. Sooner or later this event is always realized; and the temporary exceptions never hath understanding: but that which is in the midst of fools is made known.

34 Righteousnessa exalteth a nation: out sin is a reproach to any people.1

35 The king's favour is toward a wise servant: but his wrath is against him that causeth shame.

Yer. 30. A sound heart. A sound heart is a heart restored to spiritual health by Jesus, the only physician of the soul, Mat. 0. raz; and its principal symptoms are faith, hope, and love—a 'conscience void of offence,' because 'sprinkled from dead works,' which contributes as much to relieve bodily suffering, and promote bodily health, as to remove spiritual trouble and promote peace and enjoyment. C.

Ver. 33. Wisdom will neither 'cast its pearls before swine, nor give that which is holy to the dogs,'—and must therefore often rest and wait for opportunities. But the vanity that is in the heart of fools is always seeking occasions for display, and acres nothing about others if it only can glorify itself. C.

CHAPTER XV. Ver. 1. Mild, submissive, and yielding answers pacify anger and wrath: but sharp, contemptuous, and impertinent language increases passion, or kindles it up where it was not before. 2. A wise man gives profitable instructions, and understands how to speak in a seasonable and prudent manner: whereas fools, by the worthless stuff they utter, and by their indiscreet and confused manner of expressing their thoughts, only manifest their own folly. The infinite knowledge and observance of God extends everywhere, and to every person or action, thought, or disposition, whether good or bad. 4. Wholesome and profitable discourses instruct the ignorant, comfort the grieved, heal breaches, cure contentions among neighbours, and soften the exasperated; but corrupt, proud, passionate, and erroneous discourse disturbs the peace, and corrupts the temper and manners, of both speakers and corrupts the temper and manners, of both speakers and hearers. 5. Inattention to the instructions, advices, and reproofs of superiors, manifests and issues in the greatest folly; but he who willingly receives rebukes, and carefully observes them, shows himself wise, and prudently consults his own welfare and happiness.

A truly plous just and margiful man is really story. and prudently consults his own welfare and happiness. 6. A truly pious, just, and merciful man is really very rich; as, however little of this world's wealth he may possess, he has all things working for his real advantage, and God's blessing on what he has, and is contented with it: but vexation and trouble embitter the revenues of the wicked. They are gotten with anxiety, enjoyed under a curse, employed in the service of sin, and tend to their ruin. 7. Wise men tender good in structions, advices, and reproofs to all around them: structions, advices, and reproofs to all around them: but foolish men, having their heart filled with ignorance and lust, impart nothing valuable. 8. All the external devotions and most liberal almsgivings of wicked men, are so far from recommending them to God's favour, that they are abhorred by him as but the vile gratifications of their own pride, legality, or other lusts; but the most humble prayers and meanest services of those united to Christ, which are performed in faith and dependence on him, and sincerely aiming at his glory, are exceedingly acceptable to him, and issue in much comfort to themselves. 9. The whole designs, contrivances, thoughts, words, and actions of wicked men are abominable to the Lord; and this renders their reare abominable to the Lord; and this renders their religious services corrupt and hated; but he loves such as, having Jesus' sacrificial life in their souls, do, in their thoughts, affections, and endeavours, earnestly study to perfect holiness in his fear. Io. Such as dislike faithful reproof, for their apostasy from the ways of the Lord, shall be severely punished; and at last, if they continue haters of admonition and education ways of the Lord, shall be severely punished; and at last, if they continue haters of admonition and advice, shall certainly be lost. II. The state of the dead and lost, and every other thing unknown to us, are perfectly known to God. How exact then must be his poses, and thoughts of men! 12. Mockers of God and religion shun the admonitions of their conscience, and hate such as reprove them; and even avoid the company of wise, religious, or virtuous persons, lest they should meet with their reproofs or advices. 13. When the conscience is graciously purged and quieted, and the mind comforted, it issues in outward health and cheerfulness: but grief and sorrow, seizing on the heart, disturb, weaken, and dispirit it, and make a man a burden to himself and to all around.

14. Such as are burden to himself and to all around. 14. Such as are truly wise, and inwardly instructed by the Spirit of God, earnestly study to obtain more solid knowledge: but persons void of true understanding gape after, and relish nothing but frivolous, vain, and unprofitable things. 15. All the days of persons discontented under things. 13. An inecasys of persons discontinuous their afflictions are grievous and miserable: but they who have their conscience graciously quieted, their heart joyful in God, and content with their lot, have more true and perpetual comfort and satisfaction than can be enjoyed in the most delicious banquet on earth. 16. A very small share of earthly enjoyments, attended with real grace and true holiness, is better than the largest abundance of wealth with the disquiet, confusion, and anxious care which usually attend it. 17.

The meanest fare, attended by the mutual love of friends, is far preferable to the most sumptuous enter-tainment attended with hatred and contention. 18. Hasty, passionate, and furious persons are apt to quarrel for very trifles, and so disturb the most peaceable company: but those who are humble, meek, and patient, instead of raising strife themselves, will labour to compose it when it has been raised by others. A slothful man is apt to fancy or pretend a great many unconquerable difficulties in the way of his duty: but a good and active person looks on his way as easy and plain, notwithstanding a few trifling hindrances. Nothing so much rejoices the hearts of pious parents as to see their children grow up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord: but foolish children requite their mothers' fond indulgence by irreverent carriage towards them; and by despising their commands, in-structions, advices, or reproofs, and so making them contemptible. 21. They who are void of grace, sense, contemptible. 21. Iney who are void of grace, sense, and consideration, take pleasure in doing the most empty, absurd, and wicked things: but such as are truly knowing and wise study for their own pleasure truly knowing and wise study for their own pleasure and comfort, as well as for the honour of God, to conduct their thoughts, words, and actions in a regular, sincere, and holy manner. 22. Without prudent counsellors, and for want of due deliberation, the most important designs and projects often miscarry: but where, by prudent consultation, difficulties are foreseen and provided against. men's purposes succeed to their where, by prudent consultation, difficulties are foreseen and provided against, men's purposes succeed to their wish. 23. Ready, pertinent, and seasonable advice is an honour and comfort to him who gives it, especially when the good success of it is found, and it is very profitable to him who receives it. 24. Holy and gracious persons, in the pursuit of everlasting life, set their affections and hopes on things above, have their conversation in heaven, and eye the glory of God in everything they do, that they may escape sinful pollutions, horrid dangers, and everlasting destruction. 25. God takes pleasure to debase the proud, demolishing their stately houses, overturning their families, and ruining their honours and wealth: but he will preserve poor widows who have no helper in their rights, against every widows who have no helper in their rights, against every insolent or covetous invader. 26. The Lord abhors the thoughts, inclinations, purposes, and contrivances of wicked men: but the hearts of the godly being purged by his blood and Spirit, their prayers, and edifying instructions, advices, and reproofs are pleasant to him and his people. 27. They who hasten to be rich, and with anxious care labour for worldly enjoyments, not only harass all around them, but weary themselves, and plague their families, and bring the curse of God on what they have: but he who hates bribes and other what they have: but he who hates bribes and other unlawful methods of gain, shall have a competent portion of the good things of this world, and comfort and prosperity in it. 28. A good man avoids answering before he is asked, and studies to say nothing but what is pure, profitable, suitable, and seasonable: but a wicked man is apt, in a rash and forward manner, to speak what is unsuitable, sinful, and hurtful. 29. The Lord utterly dislikes wicked persons, and refuses to regard their prayers: but he is ever willing and ready to hear the prayers of the godly offered to him in faith, to hear the prayers of the godly offered to him in faith, and is their sure and present help in time of work or

CHAPTER XVI.

THE *preparations1 of the heart in man, and the answer of the tongue, is from the LORD.

2 All the ways of a man are clean in his own eyes: but the Lord weigheth the spirits.

3 Commit thy works unto the Lord, and thy thoughts shall be established.

4 The LORD hath made all things for himself; gvea, even the wicked for the day of evil.

5 Every one that is proud in heart is an abomination to the Lord: though hand join in hand, he shall not be sunpunished.4

30. It is a remarkable pleasure to behold the manifold works of God: and the good report of a given and offered Saviour, and of reconciliation to God and eternal salvation, or even a good report of ourselves or neighbours, affords inward satisfaction and comfort. 31. They who with pleasure listen to and improve wholesome instructions, tending to promote their spiritual or eternal life, increase in wisdom, and shall be qualified to give good instruction to others. 32. Such as refuse or contemn proper instructions or reproofs undervalue their own soul, neglect the means of its safety, and, for the sake of some outward and perishing thing, wilfully ruin it: but he who delights to be taught and admonished, increases in solid, soul-comforting, and saving knowledge, wisdom, and prudence. 33. A holy awe of God, and real regard to his way, disposes us to the study of true wisdom and knowledge, and is a certain mark of it; and humility and patient submission in a low condition is the best preparation submission in a low condition is the best preparation for honour and preferment.

Ver. 6. In the house of the righteous is much treasure. That is, (1) Christ the righteous, who has hid in him 'all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge.' (2) the righteous, through faith in Christ, having all the treasures of divine wisdom, faith, hope, charity, communicated by his Word and Spirit; (3) of temporal treasures, the righteous always possesses contentment, which is inseparable from godliness, and is 'great gain,' while he possesses that industry of hand which arises from freedom of spirit, and is the fruitful parent of all earthly prosperity. C.

Ver. 8. The prayer of the upright is his delight. 'The upright' are those who are not ashamed to look up with 'boldness to the throne of grace for grace to help them.' and their prayer a 'delight to the Lord,' because it renounces all the righteousness of the creature, and altogether relies upon the 'righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ.' C.

Ver. 27. He that is greedy of gain troubleth his coun house. By needless and distracting cares and toils, by transfusing the spirit of covetousness into his children, and by all the retributive consequences of that chicanery and oppression which covetousness is sure to generate, and Providence sooner or later to punish. C.

CHAPTER XVI. Ver. 1. Every right inclination, thought, or purpose in the heart, and all right management of our words, come through an active faith in God. 2. Ignorance and self-conceit make men often to think themselves faultless and holy in their conduct, when the Lord, who searches and judges the i. tentions and frame of the heart, finds it quite otherwise. 3. Commit whatever works you undertake to the direction and management of God in his providence, and implore his blessing therein, so shall your honest desires be accomplished. 4. God made and would bring men to his own service, and for the manifestation of his glorious perfections; yea, even the wicked to be instruments of his righteous will, and at last the objects of it, by continuing in their impieties. 5. When men are inwardly proud on account of their gifts, honours, or wealth, God sees them, and will certainly punish them in their pride. 6. By God's exercise of his mercy and faithfulness in giving his Son, and fulfilling his promises, men's iniquity is expiated, pardoned, and subdued; and even by their exercise of mercy, equity, and fidelity, the punishment of sin in outward calamities is often prevented. And by the fear of God implanted in the heart, and a continued holy regard to his law, men hate, watch against, and avoid sin; and so escape the fearful consequences of it. 7. When a man makes it his habitual and earnest endeavour to receive Christ, and walk in him soberly, righteously, and godly, the Lord, or his God reconciled in Christ, inclines even those who were his foes to become his friends. 8. A small estate honestly gotten and cheerfully enjoyed, is preferable to vast incomes heaped up by oppression and kept without hospitality. 9. A man's mind fixes its end, contrives the means, and perhaps reckons upon the success: but the Lord determines the event, and orders every motion and step taken towards it. Io. The edicts, commands, and decisions of kings ought always to be directed by the unerring law of God; and their decisions ought to be so just and exact, that no man may be wronged thereso just and exact, that no man may be wronged thereby. II. The Lord requires that, even in our private dealings, everything, even the smallest, should be managed with the most scrupulous integrity and equity. 12. Kings, being in the most exalted station, ought to be distinguished patterns of piety and virtue, and to countenance it in others, as the only security of their throne. 13. Kings ought highly to value and love sincere and faithful advisers, who truly inform them of what tends to their own and their kingdom's welfare what tends to their own and their kingdom's welfare, 14. The wrath of a king is almost as terrifying as a message of death, and, especially in despotic governments, often issues in death to its object: but virtuous and prudent courtiers will pacify it, and make a reconciliation. 15. The favours and gracious smiles of a prince are extremely reviving and comfortable, and fruitful of expected happiness, especially to such as he everything that is evil, and to follow that which is good: and by heedful care of their thoughts, words, and actions, their souls and bodies are, through the grace and providence of God, preserved from destruc-tion. 18. Pride and haughtiness are the ordinary forerunners of debasement and misery, and the means of triniers of decasement and misery, and the means of charist and his dear saints, to submit to the meanest condition, and patiently to bear injuries, than to partake of victories, spoil, and wealth along with the proud. 20. They who understand business thoroughly, proud. 20. They who understand dusiness indicagnly, and manage it prudently and discreetly, bid fair to have good success; but it is only by trusting in God that true and everlasting happiness can be obtained. 21. They whose heart is well furnished with experimental knowledge of God's Word, take the proper method to obtain a high reputation for wisdom and prudence; and if they can with eloquence and clearness communicate their instructions, it will greatly tend to the edification of others. 22. Spiritual knowledge and grace are the beginning and earnest of eternal life, are comfortable to him who enjoys them, and useful to others: but the learning of fools is frivolous and vain; and even their instructions do but render men foolish. 23, 24. The enlightened mind of a wise man instructs him to speak judiciously and pertinently, gives weight of evidence to what he says, and renders it pleasant to the hearer, as what he says, and renders it pleasant to the nearer, as a honeycomb is to the mouth, and nourishing and strengthening as marrow is to the bones. 25. Many are highly pleased with their own ways, even when they are such as tend to their ruin, spiritual, temporal, and eternal. 26. He that, prompted by his wants, labour in model or pleasant to provide the prompted by the wants, labours in worldly employments, procures his own preservation in life: whereas he who labours in plaguing others, will find even every evil word tend to his own hurt. 27. Wicked men, with great pains, contrive and labour to do mischief, as if treasures could be gained by it: and their lying, slanderous, and insolent speeches are very injurious, painful, and destructive. 28. Persons of a perverse, passionate, and contentious spirit raise dissensions among those who are inclined to live at peace; and they who secretly defame, backbite, detract, and whisper about false stories, make breaches between the kindest neighbours and dearest relations. had been formerly incensed against. 16. But real religion, and a solid understanding to discern between good and evil, are preferable to all the wealth that kings can bestow or industry procure. 17. It is the constant aim and endeavour of upright men to decline

6 By mercy and truth iniquity is purged;5 and by the fear of the Lord men depart from evil.

7 When a man's ways please the Lord, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him.

then, by their advice, or giving of the sign, it is furiously effected.—33. Events appear fortuitous, as the lot which is cast into the lap of a garment or into a hollow vessel: but all things are regulated by exact law; and nothing, at least in nature, happens but according to his eternal mind, and by the par-act law; and nothing, at least in nature, happens but according to his eternal mind, and by the particular regulation of his will.

Ver. 1. Various changes of translation have been proposed in this verse, all tending to say that 'man hath the disposing of the heart,' but the answer, or power to answer with the tongue, is from the Lord. But by whatever authorities supported, these changes are certainly to be rejected; for surely the thoughts of the heart are as much in the hand of God as are the answers of the tongue. The translation of Holden is to be preferred: 'The deliberations of the heart in man, and the utterance of the tongue, are from Jehovah.' C.

Ver. 4. The wicked for the day of evil. It does not mean that God created the wicked on purpose to condemn them eternally. God created the wicked on purpose to condemn them eternally. God reated the man upright, and for his own glory: man, by the abuse of his free will, 'fell from the estate wherein he was created,' and the finally impenitent God hath appointed to a right-eous sentence in the day of final judgment.' 'The evil day for the evil-doer.' C.

Ver. 10. Such a sentence is ever in the lips of Christ the King in Zion; and such should ever be in the lips of earthly kings, who, whether they know it and regard it or not, reign by him and for him, and stand accountable as stewards at his awful throne of judgment. C.

Graceful, unaffected, and earnest speech will induce others to listen and learn.—Note, while speech, both in thought and manner, is truly a gift, it is the duty of every Christian to improve what he possesses, so as to commend the truth first to the ear, and then to the heart of men. CHAPTER XVII. Ver. 1. The meanest fare, enjoyed in peace with God and our neighbour, and with quietness in our own mind, is better than the most sumptuous cheer, attended with Leawling, contention, and strife. 2. A pious and prudent servant ought to be preferred to a foolish and wicked child, and deserves a share of the inheritance in a family. 3. As gold and silver are tried and purified in the fire, so the Lord, who searches the hearts of all men, proves and refines his own people from their sinful dross in the furnace of affliction.—6. It is an honour to parents to have a numerous posterity walking in holiness and virtue; and it is the honour of children to have pious and prudent ancestors.—8. Presents and bribes appear so lovely and tempting, that few can refuse them, or decline gratifying the desire of the giver. 9. Overlooking of injuries, and mutual forbearance, is the best way to preserve and increase friendship and love: but repeating old faults breaks the strictest bonds of friendship, and makes an irreconcilable separation. 11. Some men are so wilful and refractory, that, shaking off all reverence to God and their superiors, they are wholly and irreclaimably bent on mischief; they must therefore be cut off by some exemplary punishment. 12. It is less dangerous to meet a bear in the heat of his rage, than a furious fool in the pursuit of his unruly passions and desires.—14. When

In his mysterious providence, God gives to many foolish persons natural abilities, worldly substance, and opportunities of learnabilities, worldly substance, and opportunities of learning wisdom; and yet gives them no sense or inclination to desire it. 17. A true friend continues constant in his affection and usefulness, however our circumstances alter: and a brother, who deserves the name, is especially kind and he!pful in a time of adversity. 18. He is extremely fooiish whose kindness hurries him into rash suretiship for the debts of others, especially when they are suspected of knavery. 19. He certainly loves wickedness who accustoms himself to brawling loves wickedness who accustoms himself to brawling and contention: and he who carries himself proudly, scornfully, and contemptuously towards others, lives above his estate, and builds sumptuous houses, hurries himself into ruin; and breakers of the public peace open wide the flood-gates to all impiety. 20. A man of wicked devices, which he resolves to accomplish by any means, shall find himself deceived in his expectations of good: and a false, deceitful, and self-inconsistent tongue will prove the ruin of its owner. 22. Nothing more conduces to health than solid quietness of conscience, and a moderate cheerfulness of spirit: but excessive sadness and grief waste the body, and dry it up to a mere skeleton. 23. Many wicked persons, who would refuse an open bribe, will willingly enough take bribes or presents secretly, in order to influence them to give counsel or judgment contrary to law and equity. 24. A pious and prudent man has his mind fixed upon the unerring oracles of God, and has his sense and wisdom at hand to guide and govern him; but a foolish one has his thoughts always wandermen begin a quarrel, it gradually becomes more and ing and roving about impertinences, and is never in 28 Even a fool, when he holdeth his peace, is counted wise; and he that shutteth his lips is esteemed a man of understanding.

CHAPTER XVIII.

THROUGH desire a man having separated himself, seeketh and intermeddleth with all wisdom.1

2 Ab fool hath no delight in understanding, but that his heart may discover itself.2

3 Whene the wicked cometh, then cometh also contempt, and with ignominy reproach.

4 The words of a man's mouth are as deep any fixed or serious temper.—27. The more wise and knowing a man is, he is the less apt to be talkative, speaking only what is fit and necessary; and his wis-dom renders his mind and temper humble, calm, temperate, and dispassionate. 28. So great a virtue it is to be duly silent, that if even a foolish person restrain his lips from rash and impertinent talk, he is for the time reckoned a wise and intelligent person.

Ver. 5. It is the poor man who is referred to in both clauses of this verse; consequently the second clause might be translated as follows:—'He that rejoiceth at his adversity (the adversity of the poor man) shall not be held innocent.' How often does one lear the remark made in regard to those who have fallen from affluence to poverty.' He deserves it.' It is a righteous judgment upon his pride, or his folly,' &c.! It is such observations, and the spirit which prompts them, that are here condemned. P. Ver. 7. Excellent speech becometh not a fool. Bandits often talk highly of generosity—the desert-robber defines hospitality—talk highly of generosity—the desert-robber defines hospitality—talk descruptiously of the Salubah—the manderous Pharisees talked scruptiously of the Salubah—the monks of the dark ages, while they absorbed half the riches of Europe, extolled the virtue of poverty—and pope, while domineering alike over the vassal and his lord, called themselves, in high-sounding and affected humility, 'the servants of the servants of God.' Such is 'excellent speech' in the lips of 'fools,' who demonstrate their folly by affecting to admire some solitary, convenient, and advantageous virtue, while professedly immersed in open and destructive vice. C. Ver. 14. Leave off contention in argument about vain, useless, and irrelevant matters, before strife be 'meddled with' at all: for the beginning of strife—not matter of argument, but of temper—is the breaking down of a water mound, that you may easily demolish, but may be totally unable to repair. C. Ver. 17. The love of brother to brother is a natural feeling. Except where sin or passion interfere to overcome or deaden natural affection, a man will never see a near relative wronged without making an attempt to defend him. It is not only the dividence of a kinsman to help his kinsman in trouble, but it is the inherent and natural tendency of his mind. Instin in which the parents have no share; but as warnings against the neglect of a wise and godly education, and against the intusion of vanity, self-conceit, and pride into the hearts of children, whereby so many parents literally convert them into fools. C. Ver. 27. A man of understanding is of an excellant spirit. And being of an 'excellent spirit,' he is contented to listen to what he hears; to feed upon his own thoughts, and not to intrude his opinions until love and duty absolutely require him to speak. C.

CHAPTER XVIII. Ver. 1. While self-conceited persons seek to distinguish themselves by their high pretences to wisdom, and inconstant ones seek but never find satisfaction, they who have a true desire of knowledge disengage themselves from all avocations, in order to study true wisdom. 2. A vain man studies knowledge or even religion, for no other end but to make a show with it. 3. Wherever wicked men come, make a snow with it. 3. Wherever wicked men come, they bring their contempt of God and reproaching of religion along with them, which will at last issue in contempt and misery to themseives. 4. A wise man's words, as deep waters, flow calmly, and contain the deep mysteries of God: and his heart, being full of wisdom, is ever sending forth streams of instructive, refreshing, quickening, and fructifying influences to all around him. 5. It is exceeding great wickedness to pervert justice, and, through favour or interest, to connive at and acquit the wicked, or to give the cause against a righteous man through prejudice or partiality. 6, 7. Fools, by meddling in other men's quarrels, or by 6, 7. Pools, by meading in other men's quarters, or by speeches irritating others against them, procure mischief, and even lasting and eternal ruin to themselves.

8. The slanders and reproaches of tale-bearers, however, and h ever covered over with pretences of sorrow, and how ever greedily they be received by the hearers, like mortal and incurable wounds, pierce to and rankle the very heart. 9. Idleness and prodigality are nearly allied, and both issue in the ruin of the persons guilty allied, and both issue in the ruin of the persons guilty of them. Negligence about our soul is as fatal as open and avowed ungodliness. 10. Jesus Christ, and all the perfections, promises, and providences of God in the perfections. him, are an impregnable defence and satisfaction to all such as by faith flee to him: no enemy then care ever hurt them. 11. It is only in his own conceit that the rich man's wealth appears a mean of remarkable the rich man's wealth appears a mean of remarkable safety either here or hereafter. 12. Pride in prosperity, forgetfulness of God, and despising of others, are certain means and forerunners of destruction: and humility, meekness, and patience, in a low condition, are the best preparation for honour and preferment.

13. He who, to show his quick parts, or through a 13. He who, to show his quick parts, or through a forwardness of temper, answers to a matter before he hears it fully and understands it, shames himself, and manifests his folly. 14. A manly spirit, especially if encouraged and supported by the influences of the Holy Ghost, will bear up under manifold and sore calamities of an external kind: but if the spirit be wounded with melancholy dejection, and a sense of caiamnes of an external kind; but it the spirit be wounded with melancholy dejection, and a sense of God's wrath, how insupportable is the case, till Jesus, by his blood and grace, give relief! 15. Prudent persons, by diligent meditation, and by attentive listening to instruction, labour to increase more and more in to instruction, labour to increase more and more in wisdom. 16. There are few men so mean, base, or wicked, but large gifts and presents will procure their release from prison, nay, bring them into favour with great men, or even to the honour of waiting upon princes. 17. They who are first in representing their case, ordinarily make it to appear right, and even propossess the judge in their favour: but by diligent search possess the judge in their favour; but by diligent search into their allegations, their neighbours often find in-numerable mistakes in their representations. 18. ANGMAN'S TREE, DAMASCUS. [Proverbs, xviii.]—David conquered and garrisoned the city of Damascus during his reign, and during a part of the reign of Solomon Damascus was under the dominion of Israel. The Proverbs of Solomon were written about one thousand years before Christ. We place this picture to illustrate the eighteenth chapter of Proverbs, because in some degree Damascus is connected with the beginning of the reign of Solomon in Israel. Damascus occupies the most beautiful site in Western Asia. It lies at the eastern pass of Anti-Libanus in a vast plain of great fertility, watered by the Abana and Pharpar rivers. In the center of this plain, which without the rivers would be an arid desert, in the midst of dense masses of foliage, there glisten the minarets from the mosques of Damascus. Seen at a distance it looks like a dream, a vision starting up from the desert.

some cases, where the parties contending are very powerful to maintain their pretensions, and the reasons strong on both sides, the referring of the determination to God by the lot is the proper method to put each into quiet possession of that which falls to his share. 19. No contentions are so sharp and obstinate as those between near relations and long-continued friends. is easier to take strong cities, or to bow or break the strongest iron bars, than to make a reconciliation. 20. Great care ought to be taken about our words; for, according as they are wholesome, good, and edifying, or are bad and unsavoury, shall be our temporal or eternal reward for them. 21. Much evil, or much good, necessarily issues from the right or wrong use of our tongues: and as men love and accustom themselves our tongues: and as men love and accustom themselves to good or bad discourse, shall be their reward or punishment; nay, ordinarily, they who love to talk much shall suffer by it. 22. To be provided with a pious, prudent, and active wife is a great blessing, and a singular instance of God's favour. 23. Not boldness, but medeat antestics and defail usualisations. but modest entreaties and doleful supplications, become those who are poor and miserable: but rich men are too apt to be so elated with their outward circumstances, as to return haughty and harsh answers.

Such as have friends must study to behave towards

CHAPTER XIX. Ver. 1. A poor, honest, and upright man is much more happy and honourable, than a rich wicked man that makes no conscience either of speaking or acting in a wise or gracious manner. When a man is ignorant, not knowing what to follow or what to avoid, he cannot become holy or happy. And he who in a rash and unadvised manner pursues his purpose, cannot fail to commit many sinful blunders.

3. When a man's ignorance and wickedness have made him miscarry, he often blames the providence of God, and frets and murmurs against him. 4. When men grow rich, they are sure to have many courting their favour, and professing themselves their hearty friends; but when they become poor and need friends, even but when they become poor and need friends, even those who were formerly kind turn their backs on them. 5. False witnesses and private calumniators shall at last, however slowly, meet with the due punishment of their wickedness. 6, 7. Multitudes will court the favour of the great and liberal who can enrich or advance them; but everybody is apt to desert and contemn the poor who need and beg their assistance. 8. He that receives Christ learns the true knowledge of God; and he who strictly practises the direction of his Word. shows a real regard to his own soul, and shall obtain the spiritual and eternal blessings which he needs.—10. Not plenty, prosperity, or pleasure, but rather stripes, are fit for fools: and much less is it proper for slaves to be able wantonly to domineer over princes and men of great wealth or honour. 11. It is an evidence of great wisdom to be slow to anger: and it is a great honour kindly to pass over injuries, and return good for evil. 12. CHAPTER XX.

2 The fear of a king is as the roaring of a lion; whose provoketh him to anger sinneth against his own soul.2

3 Ite is an honour for a man to cease from strife: but devery fool will be meddling.

4 The sluggard will not plough by reason of the cold;3 therefores shall he beg in harvest, and have nothing.

5 Counselh in the heart of man is like deep water: but a man of understanding will draw

6 Mosti men will proclaim every one his own goodness: but a faithful man who can find?

7 The just man walketh in his integrity: his children are blessed after him.

8 An king that sitteth in the throne of judgment scattereth away all evil with his eyes.

9 Whoo can say, I have made my heart clean, I am pure from my sin?6

10 PDivers weights,7 and divers measures, both of them are alike abomination to the LORD.

11 Even^q a child is known by his doings, whether his work be pure, and whether it be 12 The hearing ear, and the seeing eye, the Lord hath made even both of them.

13 Love not sleep, lest thou come to poverty; open thine eyes, and thou shalt be satisfied with bread.

14 Itt is naught, it is naught, saith the of ruin; but the tokens of his favour greatly refresh and invigorate their spirits. 13. An ignorant, headstrong, and impious son is a plague and grief to his parents; and a contentious wife is a gradual ruin to her family, so perpetually vexing her husband that he can scarcely live with her.

14. Persons may have houses and riches left them by parents; but a prudent wife is not obtained, even by diligent care, without the peculiar direction and blessing of the Lord. 15. Sloth and idleness sink the mind into a dull stupidity and unconcern, and thereby reduce men to extreme beggary and want. 16. He who carefully keeps the commandments of God as the rule of his life, secures the welfare of his own soul: but he that lives at random, led only by his own brutish inclinations, shall be miserable in time and in brutish inclinations, shall be miserable in time and in eternity. 17. He who compassionately relieves the necessities of the poor really enriches himself; as what he gives is but lent to the Lord, and shall be repaid, with large interest and increase of blessings, upon him and his posterity. 18. Children ought to be faithfully corrected before they are fixed in evil habits and customer. corrected before they are fixed in evil habits and customs; nor ought their cryings or entreaties make parents abate the necessary severity towards them. 19. Men given to passion and fury bring themselves into great mischiefs: and if we extricate them out of one danger, they will quickly involve themselves in another. 20. To listen to instruction, and kindly receive reproofs, or even corrections, is the proper way to attain much solid and lasting wisdom and experito attain much solid and lasting wisdom and experience. 21. Many are the purposes and contrivances of men, and they often lay them with great care: but it is only the will of the Lord which is able to bring to pass whatsoever is best. 22. A desire to do good to others is a real kindness to them, though it be not in our power to effect it. And a poor man who would fain do us good, is better than one who promises much and does little. 23. True godliness, and a religious and does little. 23. True godliness, and a religious care to please the Lord in all things, increase a spiritual life, and issue in life eternal. They afford the most satisfying comfort in God's favour, produce the most agreeable contentment with our lot, and are an excel-lent preservative both from sin and from suffering. 24. Sluggards are so much given to laziness and idle sauntering, that they can hardly be persuaded to take their meat or do the most necessary and easy things. 25. Incorrigible sinners, and particularly scoffers at religion and despisers of reproof, ought to be severely punished, as a warning to such as are inconsiderate; but such as are wise and prudent will need no more but a gentle reproof to make them learn their duty and practise accordingly. 26. Children, who by their debaucheries accordingly. 26. Children, who by their debaucheries waste their father's substance and deal unkindly with their mother, disgrace their parents, and at last render themselves infamous and miserable. 27. Great care ought to be taken to avoid listening to false doctrine, sinful advice, or even idle and frothy language, as it tends to make us wander from the true doctrines of Christ and practice of holiness. 28. An impious witness, whose conscience is so hardened that he can swear to anything, laughs at all law and justice, and even at the threatened judgment of God upon perjured persons: and the mouth of the wicked utters the most false, sinful, and mischievous speeches with greediness.

29. But terrible judgments shall certainly be inflicted upon those that scoff at conscience and religion; and indelible marks of God's displeasure shall be inflicted on those who slight good instructions.

Ver. 2. He that hasteth with his feet sinneth. He that hasteth with his feet, without judging by his head—who, more forward than thoughtful—must end in sin. C.

Ver. 3. Fretteth against the Lord. The elephant, the rhinoceros, the tiom, and the tiger are often inclosed within cages.
When wild they fret and strive, but soon learn that resistance is vain and submission good; but unrenewed man, less wise than the beasts that perish, 'fretteth against the Lord, and striveth to the end against his Maker. Grace alone can teach him to say, 'Let the Lord do what seemeth him good:' 'Thy will be done on earth as in heaven.' C.
Ver. 7. The word 'hate' must evidently be understood in the comparative sense of Lu. 14. 26. And where poverty arises from idleness, indiscretion, or wastefulness, the coldness of brethren and friends, so far from being criminal, may be a righteous judgment and retribution. In other cases, however, it may indicate a criminal want of sympathy; and in the case of Christ Jesus our Lord, was exhibited in the highest form of guiltiness. Had our Lord come in riches, splendour, and earthly pride, the Pharisees would have worshipped him whom they bought and crucified. C.
Ver. 13. Dropping. The dropping of water through the flat roofs of eastern houses must have been a common occurrence.
It would bring (1) a disagreeable noise; (2) defilement of furniture and dreas; (3) in the end rottenness; (4) disease. C.
Ver. 19. An ill-tempered man will, in the end, come to punishment; for though his friend deliver him again and again, he will at last offend beyond all power of apology or intercession. C.
Ver. 22. Kindness. The most amiable quality is kindness.
With it a man of inferior mental attainments is esteemed; without it the highest accomplishments can never secure esteem or confidence. C.
Ver. 24. His bosom. Rather 'in the dad Sex Mensenit and Ver. 24. His bosom. Rather 'in the dish,' meaning that out of which the Orientals eat with the hand. See Mat. xxiii. The meaning is the stothful, even when his hand is filled with opportunities and means of success, will not lift up his hand to provide for his own support. C.

CHAPTER XX. Ver. 1. Immoderate drinking of wine, or other intoxicating liquors, exposes men to the jest and detestation of others; it makes themselves abusive and scurrilous, mocking even at sacred things, and renders them like fools, sots, or madmen, furious, tumultuous, and quarrelsome: while it seems to exhilarate the spirits, it deceitfully drowns both reason and conscience, and tends to the ruin of both soul and buyer; but when he is gone his way, then he boasteth.

15 There is gold, and a multitude of rubies: but the lips of knowledge are a precious jewel.

16 Take his garment that is surety for a stranger;" and take a pledge of him for a strange woman.

17 Bready of deceit9 is sweet to a man; but afterwards his mouth shall be filled with gravel.

18 Every purpose is established by counsel; and with good advice make war.

CHAPTER XXI.

THE king's heart is in the hand of the LORD, as the rivers of water:1 he turneth it whithersoever he will.

2 Every wav of a man is right in his own eyes: but the Lord pondereth the hearts.

3 Tod do justice and judgment is more acceptable to the Lord than sacrifice.2

4 An high look, and a proud heart, and the ploughing of the wicked, is sin.

5 The thoughts of the diligent tend only to plenteousness; but of every one that is hasty, only to want.

6 The getting of treasures by a lying tongue is a vanity tossed to and fro of them that seek death.6

7 The robbery of the wicked shall destroy them;7 because they refuse to do judgment.

8 The way of man is froward and strange: but as for the pure, his work is right.

9 Iti is better to dwell in a corner of the house-top,8 than with a brawling woman9 in a wide house.1

10 The" soul of the wicked desireth evil: his neighbour findeth no favour2 in his eyes.

11 When the scorner is punished, the simple is made wise; and when the wise is instructed, he receiveth knowledge.

12 The righteous man wisely considereth the house of the wicked: qbut God overthroweth the wicked for their wickedness.

13 Whosor stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he also shall cry himself, but shall not be heard.

14 A' gift in secret pacifieth anger; and a reward in the bosom strong wrath.

body. 2. The just wrath of a king is terrible: and they that offend him, by exasperating language or behaviour, expose themselves to temporal and lasting ruin. 3. It is honourable to avoid contention to the utmost, and to get out of it as quickly as possible, by confessing our own faults, and forgiving those of our neighbours: but foolish and wicked persons are always ready to begin or maintain quarrels. 4. Such as, through indolence and self-indulgence, neglect their business in its proper season, may expect beggary and misery; while they who are diligent enjoy abundant felicity. 5. Some men, through their reservedness of temper, and others through deep design, conceal their intentions: but per-sons of great sagacity will discover them, or even by their artful insinuations make themselves to declare them. 6. Most men will boast how friendly, humane, charitable, and generous they are: but it is hard to find one answerable in deeds to his trust, his relation, his promises, or pretences. 7. Justified and gracious persons, by their practice, manifest the sincerity of their heart and profession; and their children are blessed of God and regarded by men on their account. 8. A king who makes it his business to execute judgment and 6. Most men will boast how friendly, humane, who makes it his business to execute judgment and justice faithfully, effectually suppresses crimes and impieties by his strict inspection of affairs. 9. No man on earth is perfectly free from sin in heart or life, nor can he make himself so. 10. To buy with larger weights or measures, and sell with lesser ones, and all other injustice, is extremely detestable to God. 11. Men's continued practice is the surest mark of their disposition, and by that the future conversation of young persons may be guessed at; and yet they, even children, often strangely conceal their vices. 12. All our natural faculties and senses, and the right use of them, are from God, and therefore ought to be employed for his glory. 13. Immoderate sleep, or other slothfulness, wastes our time and draws on poverty and want: but watchful care and diligent labours are the means of obtaining care and unigent labours are the means of obtaining everything necessary. 14. Some, while they buy goods, will dishonestly and falsely cry them down, and yet afterwards boast of their good bargain and cheating the seller. 15. Wise and gracious speeches, proceeding from a wise and understanding heart, are more valued that the gold reads or practices things on able than all the gold, pearls, or precious things on 16. Never trust him, without a proper pledge. who rashly becomes surety for everybody, strangers and harlots not excepted; for he will quickly be reduced to 17. Gains, honours, and pleasures, acquired by unrighteous courses, may at first be extremely agreeable to men; but they will at last produce anguish of conscience, pangs of repentance, or torments of despair.

18. Deliberation with ourselves, and consulting with others who are prudent, is the way to obtain success in our undertakings, especially in matters of importance and danger. 19. It is always necessary to suspect flatterers, and to turn a deaf ear to tale-bearers, who, by treacherously revealing the secrets which others have intrusted to them, labour to insinuate themselves into our confidence, and then betray us. 20. Slighters, revilers, abusers, and wishers of mischief to parents, bring fearful and lasting ruin on themselves and posterity, however they may prosper for a time. 21. Many, by unrighteous courses, quickly become rich: but the foundation being laid in rapine, extortion, or fraud, it shall quickly waste away, or prove a curse to such as enjoy it. 22. Never revenge injuries received; but commit thy cause to God who judges righteously; wait patiently in the use of lawful means for the fulfilment of his promises, and he will vindicate and deliver thee in his own time. 23. Injustice, even in the smallest things, is so extremely abominable to God, that it cannot be too much hated or avoided. 24. Men's thoughts, words, and actions are all directed by God to his own ends: and none can certainly know beforehand what will be the issue of them. 25. A sacrilegious converting of what pertains to God to our own private use, and studying how to be loosed from the obligations of solemn vows, terribly ensnare men's souls, and bring certain ruin upon them. 26. Pious and prudent magistrates exert themselves to discourage and terrify the wicked, and punish them with proper severity. 27.

The rational soul and conscience, especially when renewed by the Spirit of God, act as his deputies; discovering, judging, accusing, or approving whatever passes within us, according as it is contrary or conformable to God's revealed will. 28. Bounty and clemency, joined with justice and faithfulness to their of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead.

- 17 He* that loveth pleasure3 shall be a poor man: he that loveth wine and oil shall not be rich.4
- 18 The wicked shall be a ransom for the righteous, and the transgressor for the upright.5
- 19 It's better to dwell in the wilderness,6 than with a contentious and an angry woman.
- 20 There is treasure to be desired and oil in the dwelling of the wise: but a foolish man spendeth it up.

are the peculiar ornaments of the aged. 30. Severe corrections are necessary to restrain or reclaim some stubborn and obstinate tempers, and to purge out those corrupt affections which are lodged in the heart.

Ver. 6. Generosity is much more common than fidelity; ostentation of generosity more common still. Fidelity to man is not uncommon in the sense of honesty; but in the sense of love, admonition, rebuke, and prayer, how seldom is it to be found? Above all, while men glory in their generosity with the gifts of God, who is faithful in service to the Giver? C. Ver. 10. This is not confined to mere commercial integrity, but embraces all relative duties, whether between ourselves and our neighbours, or ourselves and God. Take one of the latter, as one of the most neglected, because spiritual and invisible. We expect gratitude of men for all our kindness: do we similarly weigh and measure our gratitude to God? We ask forgiveness of him daily for all our trespasses; do we employ the same weight and measure towards them that trespass aganst us? C.

Ver. 16. Never place confidence in a thoughtless fool who pledges his word, character, or credit for a stranger who has inveigled him. Above all, never trust an abandoned libertine, who, being 'joined to an harlot,' is dissevered from Christ, 1 Co. 6. 15. 15; and who, careless about his own soul, will never be faithful to your interest farther than he is bound by ties of law, and constrained by its compulsions. C.

Ver. 27. The thoughts of the natural man are chiefly directed to 'what he shall eat and what he shall drink,' Lu. 12. 22, 30: nay, his 'god is bely,' Phi. 3. 19. But the spirit of the renewed man is the candle of the Lord, searching out and mortifying all the deeds of the body that the soul may live. C.

Ver. 30. The bluewess of a wound, &c. Some wounds do occasionally assume a bluish tinge; but it is always an unhealthy symptom, and unfavourable to healing. The word 'blueness' should rather be rendered suppuration, which brings the description into accordanc

CHAPTER XXI. Ver. 1. The wills, inclinations, and purposes of kings and others, are entirely under the eye and observation of God: and he would turn them into right paths as surely as the gardener them into right paths as surely as the gardener or husbandman manages his canals of water. 2. Men, through their self-love, often fancy their own purposes and works to be extremely right; while the Lord, who perfectly knows their hearts, observes them to be very defective or sinful. 3. Uprightness of heart, and holiness and virtue of life, are more pleasing to God than the most nomeous devotions or the most. God than the most pompous devotions or the most liberal benefactions or alms. 4. Not only the insolence, pride, and ambition of wicked men are criminal before God, but all their natural, civil, and moral actions, and all their worldly greatness and prosperity lead to sin; and all they do is sinful in its principle, manner, and end. 5. Prudent contrivances and laborious industry are the proper means of plenty and affluence: but hasty resolutions, precipitant measures, and unjust methods involve men in trouble and loss. 6 The getting of resolutions, precipitant measures, and unjust methods involve men in trouble and loss. 6. The getting of wealth by lying, flattery, calumny, or perjury, is a beguiling and unprofitable course, however much used by such as walk in ways leading to destruction; and the wealth thus obtained is as unsubstantial and transient as heaps of chaff or clouds of smoke before the 7. The injuries which wicked men do to others, wind. 7. The injuries which where then do to others, in rendering their families poor or desolate, shall, in most ruinous punishments, be returned upon their own heads, because they are wilfully bent upon their unjust dealings. 8. The whole temper and course of a wicked man are contrary to the law and nature of God, and odious to him: but they whose consciences are washed in Jesus' blood, and their hearts renewed by his grace, in Jesus plood, and their nearts renewed by his grace, walk in good works, acceptable to God and profitable to men. 9. Better is it to live poorly and solitary in the open air, exposed to all the injuries of the weather, or to be thrust into some little corner, than have a spacious house and numerous family governed by a contentious wife, whose perpetual scolding and brawling, on the smallest occasion, is more intolerable than ing, on the smallest occasion, is more intolerable than thunder, lightning, or blustering winds. 10. A wicked man's heart desires to be ever doing mischief, and to have others falling into it: nor will he spare good or bad, friend or foe, if, by reproof or otherwise, they stand in the way of his covetousness, ambition, or other light and the way of his covetousness, ambition, or other lights. lusts. 11. When obstinate scoffers at the laws of God and men are punished in providence or by the magistrates; others, particularly such as they have seduced, will bethink themselves what they are doing: and wise men will improve instructions and admonitions, to render themselves wiser and better. 12. While rightrender themselves wiser and better. 12. While right-eous magistrates search the houses of the wicked for eous magistrates search the nouses of the wicked for ill-gotten goods, and in order that they may be duly punished and deprived of power to do further mischief, godly men, in order to deter them from like courses, the wicked for their sins. 13. They who refuse to help the poor in distress shall be reduced to misery themselves and have rope to pit a ball by themselves, and have none to pity or help them. 14.

Presents, especially if secretly and prudently given, have a powerful influence to appease angry and wrathful men. 15. The execution of justice, and the practice of boliness and wirther are a pleasure to the right. ful men. 15. The execution of Justice, and the practice of holiness and virtue, are a pleasure to the right-eous; but are a terror and burden to the wicked, whom God and the magistrates shall concur to destroy. 16. He that will not live according to the directions of God's Word, but follows the conduct of his own lusts and passions, shall, after all his extravagances, be for ever fixed in hell. 17. Voluptuous persons destroy their passions, snail, after all his extravagances, be for ever fixed in hell. 17. Voluptions persons destroy their own pleasures by wasting their estates; and they who are given to costly and delicious feeding can never thrive. 18. Wicked men often fall into the very miseries which they had prepared for the godly; and in times of common calamity are often several parain times of common calamity are often severely punished that the righteous may be delivered. 20. True wisdom enables men to procure what is necessary for their families, and to enjoy it with satisfaction; but foolish persons lavishly waste what they neither know how to get or how to live without. 21. They who make it their business to receive and improve Jesus Christ and his righteousness and grace, in a life of Christ and his righteousness and grace, in a life of holiness and virtue, shall find every new-covenant blessing in time and eternity. 22. Wise men, by their prudence, kindness, and perseverance, can effect the most difficult enterprises, and do more than others who have much more strength. 23. Restraint of the tongue from impure, false, profane, rash, injurious language, greatly preserves men from troubles, embarrassments, and miseries. 24. Pride, insolence, and outrageous words only render men infamous and contemptible. 25, 26. The slothful man is killed by an insatiable desire after that which he has not and will not labour for; but pious and diligent persons have enough for desire after that which he has not and will not labour for; but pious and diligent persons have enough for themselves, and also wherewith to relieve others. 27.

All the appearances of devotion and piety about unrenewed persons being hypocritical, proceeding from a wicked principle, done in a wicked manner, and to a wicked end, are abominable to God. 28. The testimony, character, and soul of a false witness shall quickly be to be true, is fixed and invariable in his attestations. 29. Impenitent sinners refuse to blush at their abominations, and obstinately resolve to go or in them; but sincere saints carefully conduct their thoughts, words, and actions by the rule of God's Word. 30. No projects, however wisely laid or prudently conducted, can defeat actions by the rule of God's Word. 30. No projects, however wisely laid or prudently conducted, can defeat or alter the purposes or counteract the providence of God. 31. Neither horses, chariots, nor powerful armies can obtain victories, or even protect their owners: but all safety and salvation are of and through faith in Christ himself.

Ver. 7. The robbery of the wicked shall destroy them. There are two views of the subject. (1) Several nations live by robbery, and reckon it an honourable employment. Yet, in the end, all such communities, like the piratical Algerines and murderous Thugs, are brought to destruction. (2) There is a robbery of God when he is defrauded of that worship, honour, and glory that are due to his name, which must finally terminate in the destruction of the guilty, Mal. 3.9. C.
Ver. 13. Not he that stoppeth his ear at the importunity of the poor' is condemned, for that importunity is often the result of vice, idleness, or fraud; but he that disregards 'their cry' when it arises, as in a child, from want or pain that they cannot supply or relieve. C.
Ver. 22. Never did the world appear in a more hopeless state than a little before the dawn of the blessed Reformation. The human mind was enslaved to authority and tradition—an authority without charter from God, a tradition without name, till manufactured on emergency. The consciences of men were prostrate before the shrine of the confessional: their spirits were terrified into cowardly submission by the fires of an imaginary purgatory; and the walls of spiritual Babylon were high, as unto heaven. Yet these walls were scated, and this city was taken, not by 'power nor by might,' but by a few 'wise men'—men 'made wise unto salvation' by the Scriptures [2 Ti. 3, 15], and strong and victorious by the Spirit of truth, and love, and holiness. qualifying men to be useful for God in their generation, and the noted respect and friendship of those among whom we live, are more honourable and comfortable than all the riches of the world. 2. The rich by their wealth and the poor by their labour are mutual sup-ports of each other, and ought to live together in harmony and kindness, as the same Lord made them both, and appointed them their respective conditions. Prudent men foresee calamities or temptations when approaching, and use proper means for securing themselves; but foolish and inconsiderate persons go on securely in their sins and are ruined. 4. True humility and real godliness are the certain way to honour and happiness in this world and in that which is to come. 5. Wicked men meet with much trouble and danger in their sinful ways: but he that takes proper care of his soul shall be preserved therefrom, and enjoy manifold blessings. 6. Let children be carefully instructed in the truths and accustomed to the ways of God as early and earnestly as possible, and they will retain the impression, and practise the same, as long as they live.

7. Rich men domineer over the poor; and they who borrow are obliged to depend on the will and pleasure of the lender.

8. He whose common practice is to do mischief shall be raid in his own aging with miscent. of the lender. 8. He whose common practice is to do mischief shall be paid in his own coin, with misery mischier shall be paid in his own coin, with misery and trouble; and at length his power of wronging others shall be taken from him. 9. They who compassionately observe the wants of the poor, and cheerfully relieve them, shall be largely rewarded of God. 10. The removal of graceless persons, who scorn all good counsels, from a society, is an excellent mean to compose the contentions therein and to propose the contentions. pose the contentions therein, and to prevent strifes and mutual reproaches for the future. 11. He that loves mutual reproacnes for the many and plain-heartedness, will re-commend himself even to princes, by the piety, plea-santness, and candour of his discourse. 12. God, in his providence, carefully preserves his own oracles and ordinances among men, and provides for, preserves, and honours all who through faith are made wise unto salvation: but he overrules the counsels and designs of the wicked and perfidious. 13. Slothful persons im-agine mighty hinderances in the way of their duty, where there are none, or at least very few. 14. Nothing is so dangerous, so eternally dangerous, as the ensnaring flatteries of whorish women, and the enslaving influence of fleshly lust. If a man be ensnared by them, nothing but infinite mercy and power can prevent his utter and everlasting destruction. And seldom are any, who have not provoked the Lord by former wickedness, permitted to fall into these snares. False opinions and bad inclinations adhere so closely to the minds of children, that not only instructions and reproofs, but even seasonable and duly severe chastisements, must remove their obstinate folly. 16. He that by violence or fraud oppresses the poor to enrich himself, or gives to the rich what he took from the poor, or what he should give to relieve their wants, shall himself be reduced to want and beggary. 17. Attend himself be reduced to want and beggary. 17. Attend diligently, and consider seriously, the counsels and precepts of wise men, and particularly those given in this book. 18. For it will afford thee great satisfaction heartily to embrace, thoroughly to digest, and faithfully to preserve them in thy mind: and by these means thou wilt be qualified to instruct others in them. 19.

Men who are quick and dexterous, but prudent, in despatching whatever business is committed to them, are in a fair way to be preferred to some honourable employment in the service of their prince.

Ver. 7. The rich ruleth over the poor. This should not generate either tyranny in the one, or envy in the other. It is an arrangement of Providence for mutual good—the child that obeys is as much blessed as the parent that rules. And so, where rich and poor alike fear God, the poor is as happy as the rich. C.

Ver. 15. The road of correction. Be it never forgotten by parents, that 'the rod' signifies not exclusively an instrument of punishment, but authority and power; and that 'correction' consequently is not confined to corporal punishment, but extended to every means by which the mind may be corrected by wise precept, godly example, or rational restraint. C.

Ver. 16. Giveth to the rich. Giveth bribes to the rich, as is common in eastern despotisms, to induce them to overlook and countenance his oppressions. The whole history of the pashalics of Western Asia is a striking commentary upon this important doctrine of sacred political economy. C.

Ver. 17. From ver. 17-21 there is either a preace to a new division of the book of Proverbs, or a conclusion from the foregong instructions. The latter view seems most congerial to ver. 19, 20, C.

Ver. 27. This is a warning against dishonest suretishin by going instructions.

ver. 19, 20. C.

Ver. c7. This is a warming against dishonest suretiship, by them that have 'nothing to pay.' The deducible rule is the only one consistent with Christian integrity, viz. that no man should be surety for another beyond what he is able and, if need be, willing to pay for him. C.

Never show a fondness for delicate provision; for it often betrays men into excess, or into some indecent unwarrantable behaviour. 4. Never labour immoderately with heart or hand to obtain riches; and never depend on thy own prudent management, but on God himself, for the success of thy unment, put on God nimsen, for the success of thy undertakings. 5. Never set thy mind or affections upon riches, nor pursue with eagerness what perhaps thou canst never attain; for if thou dost, they may suddenly canst never attain; for if thou dost, they may suddenly and irrecoverably be taken from thee, and become witnesses against thee before God, with respect to thy guilt in pursuing or abusing them. 6. Never receive an obligation from a sordid, covetous, and churlish wretch; and never let the best cheer tempt thee to accept of his invitation to a feast: 7. For he is to be judged of by the disposition of his heart, not by his fair accept of his invitation to a feast: 7. For he is to be judged of by the disposition of his heart, not by his fair words. And while he flatters and urges thee to eat, he has no real kindness for thee, nor in the least wishes thee to make use of his provision. 8. When thou seest his sordid carriage, it will make thee repent thy tasting his solution carriage, it will make thee repent thy tasting of his dainty meats, or paying any regard to his kind but deceitful compliments. 9. Never envy the prosperity of sinners; but study to live in favour and in humble fellowship with God. Thus shall thy troubles quickly have an end, and the expected blessings of eternity be enjoyed by thee, while the prosperity of sinners shall be turned into everlasting misery. 19-21. Pay the utmost regard to the instruc-tions, reproofs, and good example of parents: spare no pains or cost to know, embrace, and hold fast the truths of God; to find out and walk in the true way of salvation, and to grow in the knowledge of Christ, and never part with it upon any account. deliberate thought and sufficient preparation. Never rashly or groundlessly affirm or insinuate anything to the hurt of thy neighbour's character; and never entice any one to believe or say ill of him. 29. Never, either in heart, word, or deed, revenge the injuries done to thee. 30-34. And from the misery and want which others have brought upon themselves, by their negligence, sloth, or misspending of time, learn earnestly to avoid these things, as ruinous to thy outward estate, as well as to the spiritual and eternal happiness of thy soul.

Ver. 14. The knowledge of wisdom—the knowledge of Christ, the power of God, and the wisdom of God, revealed to Old Testament saints in prophecies and types, not so clearly to the Jewish, but yet as certainly, as to the Christian church. C. Ver. 16. A just man falleth seven times, &c. He falleth six times into trouble, sorrow, disappointments, and various calamites in worldly labours and affairs, arising sometimes from his own mistake or oversights, sometimes from others: a seventh time into reigious afficitions (for such is the ordinary import of the seventh, as derived from the Sabbath), and these fallings may include mental anguish for himself, his friends, yea, his enemies, or the church—or they may include persecutions for the sake of truth and righteusness. Still he shall rise again, being helped of God, who will graciously perfect strength in his creature's weakness. C.

of God, who will graciously perfect strength in his creature's weakness. C.

Ver. 26. Either he that giveth a right answer to a judge, whereby truth and justice are settled; or a right answer to an inquirer, whereby knowledge is extended; or a right answer to a caviller and false accuser, whereby inquirty is exposed, and innocence and right protected.

Ver. 30-32. I went by the field of the slothful... and received instruction. There is no darkness, nor shadow of death, where the workers of iniquity may hide themselves, Job 34-22. Do as they may, they are detected even by the eye of man. Thorns, nettles, and broken walls whisper the story of their owner's indolence, and point out the invisible spectre, poverty, as he advances in the guise of a hungry traveller, and discover the gleaming of those resistless arms with which he will soon destroy. his thoughtless and self-devoted victim. C.

CHAPTER XXV. Ver. 2. It is the glory of God that his counsels are unfathomable, and his works, either of creation and providence, so mysterious, that the wisest on earth cannot comprehend their nature, reason, or ends: but it is the honour of kings diligently to search the Scriptures, thoroughly to examine intricate causes, and dive into plots and conspiracies, or fully to display the reasons of their actions. 3. But vulgar minds can no more judge of the secret reasons of statesmen, than they can perfectly search and measure the heavens and the earth. 4, 5. As silver, when purified from its dross, may be framed into whatever vessels the founder pleases; so kingdoms may be established in the most virtuous and happy forms when virtuals are the same virtuals and happy forms when virtuals are the same virtuals and happy forms when virtuals are the same virtuals are the same virtuals and happy forms when virtuals are the same virtuals are virtuals and happy forms when virtuals are virtuals are virtuals and happy forms when virtuals are virtuals are virtuals and happy forms when virtuals are virtuals and happy forms when virtuals are virtuals are virtuals and happy forms when virtuals are virtuals are virtuals are virtuals and happy forms when virtuals are virtuals are virtuals are virtuals. display the reasons of their actions. most virtuous and happy forms, when wicked persons are removed from the counsels and company of kings. 6, 7. Never ambitiously affect or thrust thyself into courts, or any places or stations that belong not to thee; for it will be more honourable and satisfying to be invited to them, than to be disgracefully thrust from the honours which thou hast arrogated to thyself, and that in the presence of the prince unto whom thou hast approached too near. 8-10. Never enter into any contention till thou hast well considered the goodness and weight of thy cause, and how to manage it, lest in the issue thou thy cause, and now to manage it, lest in the issue thou be plunged into perplexity and covered with shame, And, if it be possible, make up matters privately, even where thy cause is good. And never let anger or hatred provoke thee to discover thy neighbour's secrets in order to disgrace him, lest such as hear of it not contain approach thee for the prefedences. only reproach thee for thy perfidiousness, but ever retort upon thee such shameful conduct, which will render thee infamous through life. 11, 12. A wise instruction, advice, reproof, or word of comfort, seasonably and propagly given is complete and reproach seasonable and propagly given. sonably and properly given, is comely, valuable, and ornamental: and scarcely can anything be more ornamental. mental in life than a ready and humble hearkening and submitting to wise and seasonable reproof. 13. Cold drink or air in harvest is not more grateful and refresh-report of their success. 14. It is extremely empty and deceiving to boast of graces, virtues, or abilities which we have not, or to promise what we cannot or care not to perform. 15. By patient submission and expectation princes are most readily pacified and persuaded: and humble, soft, and affectionate language bows the most stiff and hardened tempers, and overcomes even stubborn resolutions to the contrary. 16. Created comforts and pleasures are very agreeable if used in due moderation; but otherwise they lose their relish and plunge us into guilt and trouble. 17. To maintain a friendly intercourse with our neighbours is dutiful and pleasant; tercourse with our neighbours is dutiful and pleasant; but too many, too long, or unseasonable visits render us disagreeable and disliked. 18. Slander and a bearing false witness are most dangerous and murderous means of destroying our neighbour. 19. Confidence in an unfaithful person in the time of trouble will, to our great anguish and grief, entirely disappoint us of help or relief. 20. As taking away clothes in winter increases our sense of cold. and vinezar irritates nitre. increases our sense of cold, and vinegar irritates nitre, so unseasonable mirth renders a sad heart still more sorrowful. 21, 22. In time of need always render good for evil; and kindly bestow necessary supplies on such as have injured thee: thus shalt thou soften their rage, slay their hatred, and gain their affections; and the Lord shall reward thee with blessings, while he fear-fully punishes them if they continue obstinate. 23. As the north wind in many countries dispels clouds and prevents rain, so frowns and rebukes check reproachful slandering and lying. 24. It is better to live cooped up in a corner, exposed to all the injuries of the weather, than in a large family and stately palace with a contenthous, brawling, and scolding wife. 25. Good and certain news from a far country, where our friends and fortunes are, is expected with impatience, heard with drink or air in narvest is not more grateful and refreshing to the reapers, than good servants or ambassadors are to their masters, by their speedy despatch of the important business committed to them, and faithful God the blessed tidings of pardon, peace, grace, and

17 He^t that passeth by, and meddleth with strife belonging not to him, is like one that taketh a dog by the ears.6

18 As a mad man who casteth firebrands. arrows, and death, 19 Sou is the man that deceiveth his neighbour, and saith, Am not I in sport?

20 Where no wood is, there the fire goeth out; so "where there is no tale-bearer," the strife ceaseth.1

21 As coals are to burning coals, and wood to fire; so is a contentious man to kindle strife.

22 They words of a tale-bearer are as wounds, and they go down into the innermost parts2 of the belly.

23 Burning lips, and a wicked heart, are like a potsherd covered with silver dross.

24 He that hateth dissembleth with his lips, and laveth up deceit within him:

25 When he speaketh fair, believe him not; for there are seven abominations6 in his heart.

26 Whose hatred is covered by deceit, his wickedness shall be showed before the whole congregation.8

27 Whoso diggeth a pit shall fall therein; and he that rolleth a stone, it will return upon

28 Ad lying tongue hateth those that are afflicted by it: and a flattering mouth worketh salvation. 26. When righteous men are decoyed into scandalous sins, or are degraded from their influence and authority, and oppressed and persecuted, it is as burtful to a church or nation as if the public fountains were corrupted and poisoned. 27. To hunt after worldly applause and honours, however sweet they be to corrupt nature, is extremely disgraceful and danger. 28. And to be furious and passionate renders us ous. 28. And to be furious and passionate renders us useless and miserable.

Ver. 1. Men of Hezekiah. Who the 'men of Hezekiah' were is unknown; and in such cases conjecture is useless. Nor would the knowledge be of any value, for the object of the record is not to give authority to these proverbs, but to remind the wise men of one generation to preserve and copy out for circulation the wisdom of a foregoing generation.—Note, It is thus God has given grace to the Protestant churches to multiply and circulate so many millions of copies of the Holy Scriptures in almost all languages of the earth. C.

Ver. 9. In perfect accordance with that precept of our Saviour, 'If thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone,' Mat. 18. 13.—Every confidential secret implies a trust; and he that reveals it, even to his most inimate friend, thereby teaches that friend to divulge it to another, and is thus most likel," to be brought to shame as an idle babbler or unfaithful steward. C.

Ver. 17. Holden and others interpret the passage of oranges, citrons, and such golden or precious fruit, produced at feasts in baskets of silver network. But as it contains no mention of taste, the reference seems rather to be to figures of fruit of gold, interspersed amongst branches and leaves of silver, according to the gorgeous style of eastern palaces. C.

Ver. 13. As the cold of snow in the time of harvest. The snow of the lofty Hermon supplied, throughout the heat of sumer and toil of harvest, snow for cooling either wine or water—the most reviving of all cordials under a burning sun. C.

Ver. 17. No wise man can be much in his neighbour's house; for any man will find useful employment in his own. And he that imposes himself upon others, because he is weary of himself or of his duty, will soon become a weariness and a muisance to others. C.

others. C. Ver. 20. As vinegar upon nitre. Vinegar poured on the nitre of the ancients (carbonate of soda) causes an instant ebullition in the form of tears. And so does the ill-timed mirth of the fool wring new sorrows from the heavy heart. C. Ver. 22. Thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head, &c. An so extract love from his angry heart, and purify him from his enmity, as 'coals of fire' extract metals from the hard rock, and clear away the dross with which they are commingled. The Lord shall reward thee' with this enemy's conversion, or the esce of these own conscience. C.

Ver. 26. A righteous man, tempted by fear or hope, to flatter and become subservient to the wicked, is sure to trouble his own peace of mind, if not finally to corrupt his principles. Peter trembling before a servant maid, and accommodating his speech to a rude and blasphemous soldiery, is a striking exemplification of this proverb. C.

CHAPTER XXVI. Ver. 1. Dignity and authority are very ill placed in the hands of foolish and wicked men, who know not how to use them, but will do mischief to themselves and others by them. 2. Causeless curses and imprecations can hurt the innocent no more than the birds that fly over their heads. 3. Obstinate, stupid, and refractory sinners, like beasts, must, by sharp punishments, be restrained from evil and excited to good. 4. Answer not an ignorant and impertinent fool in his own brawling and reproachful a proud conceited fool with such strength and evidence of reason as may reader him and evidence of reason as may render him sensible of his folly, and 6. He who employs fools or rakes in check his pride. any important business, deprives himself of the advantage he might have expected, and brings much inconvenience and mischief upon himself. 7. As dancing or walking by a lame man would but manifest his lameness, so the pretences of fools to wisdom do but render them the more ridiculous. 8. Honour bestowed upon them the more ridiculous. 8. Honour bestowed upon fools is very unstable and useless, if not mischievous. Grave, holy, and wise sayings upbraid fools for their impertinence and wickedness, however insensible they may be of the sharpest rebukes. 10. God, and even wise princes, punish sins of ignorance and wilful wickedness in a wise, just, and suitable manner. 11. Foolish sinners quickly, and often shamelessly, return to the very sins for which they have been sharply punished, and of which they have before repented, as grievous and hurtful. 12. There is more hope of the amendment of a sottish man, than of one who is so wise and virtuous in his own conceit that he thinks himself above instruction. 13. They who have no mind to labour, never want pretences for their idleness; and their sluggish fancy represents to them the most improbable and insuperable difficulties. almost a toil for such to turn themselves on their bed; and though they seem busy, they do nothing to the purpose. Though they move in the formal round of external duties, they are never a whit nearer to heaven. 15. Pretending cold, or inability, they can scarcely apply to any work; and it is almost a burden for them to take their meat. 16. But though they take no pains to acquire knowledge, they look upon themselves as perfect miracles in wisdom, and treat with absolute contempt every argument that can be used to convince them of their mistakes and danger. 17. It is extremely dangerous to engage in other men's quarrels and disputes, which do not belong to us. 18, 19. To wrong owneighbours, by either word or deed, and then pretend that it was in jest, discovers us to be stupidly insolen and diabolically mad. 20. A proper discouragement of tale-bearers, whisperers, and slanderers, is an effectual mean to prevent contentions, or even to extinguish such as are begun. 21. It is also necessary to avoid contentious persons, who, by their provoking language, kindle up or inflame quarrels, even as one inflamed coal or piece of wood kindles another. 22. The wounds given to men's characters, business, and spirits, by calumnies slyly and secretly spread, are extremely painful and hurtful, and sometimes will scarcely admit of a cure. 23. Malicious and angry language corresponds very well with an envious and wicked heart; and notwithstanding their fine show, scarcely anything is more detestable than affectionate words when used to cover hatred and enmity of heart; nor will the dissimulation pass long undetected. 24-26. Nothing is more com-mon in the world than dissembled professions of regard and affection; and yet nothing more base, and in the end more hurtful and ignominious, to the user. 27. They who labour to destroy their neighbours, whether by fraud or violence, involve themselves in the very mischiefs which they had intended for others. 28. Liars and slanderers chiefly hate those whom they have slandered, fearing that they may avenge themselves; and also those who confute their slanders. And flat-

26 The lambs are for thy clothing, and the goats are the price of the field:

Ver. 2. As wandering will never bring the bird home, and as the will never bring the swallow to rest, so the curse without a cause will never light upon the head of the innocent object of the curser's enmity. C.

Ver. 10. If there be one practical advice more important than another, it is this: 'Never speak a word but in truth—be always in earnest.' a loose jest may 'set the table in a roar;' no harm may be meant; but no good is intended: it is therefore sin. And as a firchard, thrown at random, may destroy a splendid palace, so may a thoughtless 'est ruin a fair reputation.—Note, Children, look to a Good of truth—speak words of truth—never jest at the uspense of truth—ue always in earnest. C.

Ver 23. Silver drove is ordinarily lead, with which the cheapest kinds of earthenware are covered by the potter while immersed in a burning furnace. 'Burning lips' are not 'hips greathing warmth of affection,' but 'words that burn' up reputations (see ver. 24), and which are often covered over, and even ormamented as with 'silver dross.' Yet as a 'potsherd' shall they be dashed to pieces, when men 'by their words shall be institled, and by their words shall be condemned.' C.

CHAPTER XXVII. Ver. 1. Never boast what thou wilt be, or do, in any future period; for thou knowest not what changes Providence may make in a very short time. 2. Never commend thy own excellencies or works; but leave that to others who cannot be suspected of partiality. 3, 4. The anger, cruelty, and rage of foolish men are very intolerable, crushing, and hard to be appeased; but an envious desire of revenge is still more dangerous, as it lies hid, increases deliberation of the superior of the super daily, and is more and more exasperated, till it find opportunity to vent itself in the intended mischief. 5. To tell men plainly of their faults, and rebuke them freely when need requires, is a more valuable piece of friendship than the strongest inward affection. 6. Just and seasonable reproofs, however severe, ought to be cheerfully received when they proceed from true love and faithful regard: but the most tender and abundant expressions of kindness from an enemy ought to be susto be unsatisfied with, or even to nauseate, the most delicious enjoyments: but poverty disposes men to a ready and thankful reception of the smallest blessings, though mixed with care and labour. 8. When men, by levity or discontent, change their country, trade, or office in which Providence had placed them, they or-dinarily expose themselves to manifold dangers and inconveniences, but rarely mend their condition. 9. The kind conversation and vrudent counsels of affectionate friends are extremely refreshing and comfortable. 10. Nay, such friends are more to be depended on in a time of distress than our nearest relations. II. My son, improve these instructions to Lake thee truly wise and good; which will at once comfort my heart, and enable me to refute such as charge me with want of due care about my children.

12. Prudent men foresee the approach of calamities, and take proper methods to avoid them; but inconsiderate persons, deceived by others, securely rush forward till they are ruined.

13. Never securely rush forward in they are runed. 13. Never trust, without a sufficient pledge, a man that is so foolish and rash as to be surery for persons whom he knows not, and even for harlots. 14. Extravagant and flattering commendations of a friend or benefactor are rather a disparagement than an honour, as it is a shame to have connection with such silly sycophants. contentious and brawling woman is a continued plague and a destructive ruin to her husband, family, and estate: 16. For it is quite impossible to conceal her infamous bawling humour, or to make her hold her tongue. 17. By mutual conversation friends quicken the wit, enliven the affection, strengthen the judgment, and animate the activity of one another. 18. Such servants as faithfully defend their master's person and reputation, and labour to preserve and promote his wealth, ought to be rewarded by him, and shall be honoured of God and men. 19. There is a surprising likeness in the tempers and dispositions of men, both pected as false and treacherous. 7. Rich men are apt among saints and sinners; and most are inclined to carry themselves towards others as they do towards them. And they who are remarkably sagacious can penetrate far into the inclinations and designs of others. 20. It is impossible to satisfy the corrupt desires of men: the more they are indulged the more they crave: and nothing but the fulness of God can satisfy the desires of an immortal soul. 21. Nothing more effectually tries a man than high commendations. If he be light, vain, frothy, and easily puffed up by them, it discovers his emptiness: but if under them he be humble, modest, and sensible of his own defects, it manifests him truly valuable. 22. Some are so hardened and stupified in their sinful courses, that no reproofs or corrections can make them a whit better. 3-27. Masters should look after the management of their worldly affairs themselves, and not leave all to servants; for without due care and diligence, the richest servants; for without due care and diligence, the richest estates will soon come to nought: whereas by a proper care of the hay, grass, herbs, and flocks which Providence bestows, they may enjoy a most comfortable livelihood for themselves and families.

Ver. 16. Eastern women may be literally called hidden, whether in the tent in the desert, or the harren in the city. But the unsanctified contentions woman, who has not received of the Lord that ornament of a 'meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price,' i Pe. 3.4, can no more have her folly hid than the wind can be restrained from blowing, or ointment on the hand from betraying its presence by its odour. C.

Ver. 22. The petite and mortar were used for separating grain from the husk long subsequent to the introduction of mills; and mosme European countries are still used for the formation of a substitute for what, in Britain, is called 'pearl-barley.' The image admirably illustrates the inseparability of folly from a fool. C.

CHAPTER XXVIII. Ver. 1. Guilt makes men cow ards but conscious integrity makes men courageous, and proceed with undaunted resolution in the most hazardous undertakings. 2. To punish the wickedness of nations, God permits them to fall into factions or mun der their sovereigns; but a prince of remarkable piety for thy food, for the food of thy household, and for the maintenance for thy maidens.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

General observations of impiety and religious integrity.

THE wicked flee when no man pursueth: but but the righteous are bold as a lion.

- 2 For the transgression of a land many are the princes thereof: abut by a man of understanding and knowledge the state thereof shall be prolonged.2
- 3 A poor man that oppresseth the poor is like a sweeping rain, which leaveth4 no food.5
- 4 They that forsake the law praise the wicked: but such as keep the law contend with them.
- 5 Evil^h men understand not judgment: but they that seek the Lord understand all things.
- 6 Better is the poor that walketh in his uprightness, than he that is perverse in his ways, though he be rich.
- 7 Whoso keepeth the law is a wise son: but he that is a companion of riotous men⁶ shameth his father.
- 8 He¹ that by usury and unjust gain⁷ increaseth his substance, he shall gather it for him that will pity the poor.
- 9 He" that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be abomination.
- 10 Whoso^p causeth the righteous to go astray in an evil way, he shall fall himself into his own pit: but qthe upright shall have good things in possession.
- 11 The rich man is wise in his own conceit:8 but *the poor that hath understanding searcheth him out.
- 12 Whent righteous men do rejoice, there is great glory: but when the wicked rise, a man eat glory: but when the wicked rise, a man hidden. hidden. He that covereth his sins shall not prosis hidden.

and prudence is extremely useful for settling or preserving a state. 3. A needy man placed in power, and squeezing from the poor that little which they have, is squeezing from the poor that little which they have, is a most ruinous scourge to a nation. 4. Apostates from the ways of God are the most forward in encouraging men in wickedness, and commending them for it: but they who resolutely observe God's law, do what they can to reform or punish them. 5. Unregenerate men have no solid or experimental knowledge of what is right or wrong: but they who study God's Word, and depend on his instructions, understand whatever is necessary to salvation. 6. A poor man, who acts honestly and uprightly in all he does, is far happier, and more useful and commendable, than a rich pretender to virtue, who obstinately and craftily practises vice. 7. virtue, who obstinately and craftily practises vice. 7. He is an honour to his parents, as well as to himself, who studies the law of God, and observes the rules of piety and sobriety there prescribed: but he that associates himself with rakes, drunkards, and gluttons, and spends his time and money ir sensual pleasures, is a shame and vexation to them.

8. God often translates the wealth, gotten by covetousness and oppression, from the gatherers into the hands of such as are mercinul and benevolent. 9. The very prayers and other religious services of them who obstinately live in their sins are, in God's view, an abominable and hypocritical prostitution of his ordinances, since it appears as it cal prostitution of his ordinances, since it appears as in they thus intended to make him a partner in their wickedness. 10. They who by their persuasion, ex-ample, or cunning contrivances seduce upright men into sinful and dangerous practices, shall themselves irrecoverably fall into that very mischief which they intended for others: but they who live in simplicity and intended for others: but they who live in simplicity and godly sincerity shall enjoy the blessings of grace here and of glory hereafter. II. Rich men, being courted and complimented by every one, are apt to imagine themselves extremely wise: but sensible and religious persons, however poor, quickly discern their emptiness and ignorance. I2. It is an honour and happiness for a nation when pious and product they are advantaged to a nation when pious and prudent men are advanced to places of power and trust: but when the wicked are exalted, the persons, lives, and estates, especially of good men, are in danger, and they are obliged to con-ceal them. 13. He that conceals, extenuates, or defends his sins, exposes himself to severe punishments: but he who through faith in Christ confesses and for-sakes them, shall be graciously blessed by God and honoured by men. 14. Happy is he who lives under the constant awe of God's perfections, and under a jealousy of his own evil heart and a fear to do evil: but he that obstinately and presumptuously goes on in his sinful courses shall irrecoverably and eternally 15. How cruel and terrible a plague is a tyrannical ruler! His subjects, unable to resist, are har-assed by oppression, and terrified with fears of still greater evils .-- 17. Murderers shall never be able to escape the judgment of God; but shall hurry them-selves into sudden and irretrievable destruction, with-out any one to help or pity them. 18. Real godliness, strict honesty and integrity, are the sure road to safety, honour, and happiness: but fraudulent sinners, obstincandour in their dealings, shall have abundant blessings from God and honours from men: but they who hasten to be rich, render themselves execrable by their base and fraudulent methods. 21. When judges have accustomed themselves to respect persons in judgment, the most insignificant bribe will make them disregard both law and equity, and favour an unrighteous cause. 22. He that hastens to be rich envies everybody who has more than himself, covets whatever he sees, and grudges to part with the most necessary expense or alms; and never seriously thinks how quickly God may take him from his wealth, or it become a curse to him, so that through his money he corrupts himself. 23. They who in an honest and friendly manner reprove a man for his faults, will afterwards have much more of his favour and regard than they who flatter him in his sins. 24. They who snatch all that they can from their parents are as bad as common robbers, and are in a fair way to associate themselves with such. 25. A man of a proud, insolent, and ambitious spirit involves himself in perpetual quarrels, and has no satisfaction in what he enjoys; nay, many times wastes his estate in contentions: but he who, trusting in the Lord to redress his grievances, patiently have injuries live comfortably and happy. 26. No. bears injuries, lives comfortably and happy. 26. Nothing is more foolish than to rely wholly on our own wisdom and ability, or to trust in our own heart, which is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked: but he who walks according to the counsels of wise men, honour, and nappiness: but fraudulent sinners, obstinate in their wickedness, shall quickly involve themselves in the depths of misery. 19, 20. They who believe in Christ, and act with diligence, fidelity, and believe in Christ, and act with diligence, fidelity, and believe in Christ, and act with diligence, fidelity, and believe in Christ, and act with diligence, fidelity, and believe in Christ, and act with diligence, fidelity, and believe in Christ, and act with diligence, fidelity, and believe in Christ, and act with diligence, fidelity, and believe in Christ, and act with diligence, fidelity, and believe in Christ, and act with diligence, fidelity, and believe in Christ, and act with diligence, fidelity, and believe in Christ, and act with diligence, fidelity, and believe in Christ, and act with diligence, fidelity, and believe in Christ, and act with diligence, fidelity, and believe in Christ, and act with diligence, fidelity, and believe in Christ, and act with diligence, fidelity, and believe in Christ, and act with diligence, fidelity, and believe in Christ, and act with diligence, fidelity, and believe in Christ, and beli

Ver. 5. They that seek the Lord understand all things. They know more about all things, than worldly men know about any one thing; for they 'know that all things work together for good to them that love God.' C.

Ver. 7. Shameth his father. Shames him for neglecting his education—for not restraining him in time—or, notwithstanding all his care, breaks his heart by his incorrigible follies. C.

Ver. 11. It is the special duty of the rich to give their children a good education, both in secular and religious knowledge; for if the well-educated poor once discover any inferiority in the rich, contempt for their ignorance, and the disorganization of society, is sure to follow.—Note, A true religious education can alone teach the rich kindness and the poor gratitude. C.

Ver. 17. The murderer shall flee iterror of conscience till the grave receives him: let no man stay him in this flight by hiding him from deserved justice, Ge. 9.6. C.

Ver. 22. An evil eye never means, as the ignorant and superstitious imagine, an eye that can inflict evil according to the malignity of its owner; but an eye that cannot see aright, because of some obstruction in its organization. In this verse, temporal riches form the obstruction that will not permit the hastener to see things that are 'not seen and eternal,' 2Co.4.18. C.

CHAPTER XXIX. Ver. 2. 4. Where justice is

CHAPTER XXIX. Ver. 2, 4. Where justice is impartially executed, and liberty and property secured, the nation grows great and happy; but bribery and oppressive taxes ruin a state. 5. Flatterers artfully draw men into wickedness and ruin. 6. In the wicked course of sinners, one sin draws on each or each course of sinners, one sin draws on another and its course of sinners, one sin draws on another and its attendant plagues; but the godly, by walking in Christ, obtain solid and lasting joy and comfort.—8. Obstinate sinners and scornful men, by laughing at all things serious, sacred, or civil, throw nations and cities into the most ruinous disorder; but pious and prudent rulers by their prayers and piets, avert the deserved the most runous disorder; but pious and prudent rulers, by their prayers and piety, avert the deserved judgment of God, and by their wise conduct divert the fury of men. 9. It is to no purpose to spend reason-ings or reproofs upon incorrigible fools; for in what-ever manner they appear to take them, they will still pressit in their folly and wickedness. In Bloodpersist in their folly and wickedness. 10. Blood-thirsty men direct their murderous malice especially against godly magistrates or other valuable persons; but such as are truly virtuous labour to defend and promote the welfare of such. 11. Fools inconsiderately speak out whatever comes into their head; but wise men think well before they speak, and only utter what they know and as the opportunity requires 112. If a ruler hearken to lies, flatteries, or false accusations, his whole court will quickly become so wicked, that it will be hard to find an honest man in office. 13. Poor men who want estates, and rich men who get or increase their estates by fraud, are connected together in this world, and the Lord, without distinction, allows to both his light of nature, or revelation, and blassians of possidence are is good in his cight. allows to both his light of nature, or reversion, and blessings of providence, as is good in his sight. 14. Kings who faithfully administer justice to their sub-jects, and set themselves to protect and help the poor. stake the most proper course to gain their subjects' affection, and to continue their kingdom to many generations.

15. Careful instructions and reproofs, and product corrections are of great use to render and prudent corrections, are of great use to render children wise, prudent, and pious: but children left to children wise, prudent, and pious: but children left to follow their own inclinations prove a disgrace and plague to parents, particularly to their indulgent mothers. 16. When wicked men are increased in number and advanced in dignity, presumptuous wickedness abounds more and more: but the righteous ought not to be discouraged, as they shall quickly see their downfall. 17. Children carefully brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, bid fair to be a help and comfort to their parents. 18. Where men want the oracles of God and ordinances of the gospel, they cannot but live wickedly on earth and be miserable they cannot but live wickedly on earth and be miserable ness of such as, renewed by his grace, strictly observe his laws. 19. No persuasion, reproofs, or threatenings will avail with some refractory and slavish-minded servants; nothing but blows will make them regard what is said or attend to their duty. 20. It is more easy to instruct and reform the most weak and ignorant, than instruct and reform the most weak and ignorant, than to rectify what is amiss in a rash, heady, and self-conceited manager of his affairs. 21. If servants, who continue long in a family, be too much indulged or favoured, they are apt to behave with as much boldness and freedom as if they were children; or even to domineer over them, and labour to disinherit them. 22. Passionate persons are apt to quarrel and contend about trifles, and to fall into a multitude of sins, in word or deed, both against God and men. 23. Proud, saucy, and ambitious behaviour renders men contemned, hated, and miserable; but meekness and humility procure useful and lasting honours. 24. Partnership with thieves or fraudulent persons, endangers both soul and body, and is apt to involve men in perjury. 25. An immoderate fear of men ensnares us into much guilt Immoderate rear or men ensuares us into much gunt and mischief: but he that puts his whole confidence in God shall be preserved from them. 26. Multitudes court the favour of princes and other great men: but it is God alone who determines the lots of men here and hereaster. 27. There is a stated antipathy between the righteous and wicked; their natures, tempers, coun-hereafter. 27. There is a stated antipathy between the righteous and wicked; their natures, tempers, counsels, and ends being the very reverse of each other.

Ver. 1. Hardeneth himself by seeking excuses or palliations for his sin; or even false interpretations and doctrines to defend his evil courses. He 'shall fall without remety,' as the carcasses of the unbelievers fell in the wilderness, to whom God sware in his wrath, they should not enter into his rest, He. 3. II. C.

Ver. 4. He that receiveth gifts. According to the margin, 'a man of oblations.' The true meaning seems to be: a king who supports justice and equity in the fear of God, establishes his kingdom; but he who substitutes for these 'weightier matters of the law,' mere 'legal oblations,' ceremonial observances, over-throws it. This was literally exemplified and fulfilled by the rulers of the Jews in the days of our Lord. See Mat. 23. 23, 36. C.

Ver. 22. The ruler that 'hearkens to lies,' is either he that will bear nothing but flattery, or he that will credulously receive false accusations, and will indolently neglect to judge for himself. All his servants will soon be wicked; for godly men will fly from him; and wicked men will gather around him, as vultures to the carcass of the dead. C.

Ver. 13. The decitiful man, who overreached him, oppressed him, and made him poor—The Lord lighteneth both their eyes, The enriched to see, if he would, better riches than he has gained; the poor, to seek better than he has lost. C.

Ver. 29. Even 'a servant' will not be corrected by (mere hasty) words, see ver. 20; example, authority, and religious principle must all be brought to bear upon him. C.

Ver. 24. That the Jewish judges adjured the accused is evident from the case of our Lord, Mat 26, 62-64. The verse accordingly means, that the 'partner' (the accomplice) of the third hears such an adjuration; yet, bound by a false and diabolical principle, misnamed honour, 'bewayeth not the matter,' and is thereby guilty of perjury, to the ruin of his soul. C.

14 There is a generation whose teeth are as swords, and their jaw-teeth as knives, to tdevour the poor from off the earth, and the needy from among men.3

15 ¶ The horse-leech hath two daughters, crying, Give, give. There are three things that are never satisfied, yea, four things say not, It is enough:5

16 The grave; and the barren womb; the earth that is not filled with water; and the fire that saith not, It is enough.

17 The eye that mocketh at his father, and despiseth to obey his mother, the ravens of the valley6 shall pick it out, and the young eagles shall eat it.

18 There be three things which are too wonderful for me, yea, four which I know not:

19 The way of an eagle in the air; "the way of a serpent upon a rock; the way of a ship in the midst of the sea; and the way of a man with a maid.

20 Sucha is the way of an adulterous woman; she eateth, and wipeth her mouth, and saith, I have done no wickedness.

21 For three things the earth is disquieted, and for four which it cannot bear:

22 For a servant when he reigneth; and a fool when he is filled with meat:

23 For an odious woman when she is married: and an handmaid dthat is heir to her mistress.

24 There be four things which are little upon the earth, but they are exceeding wise:8

25 Theg ants are a people not strong, yet they prepare their meat in the summer;

26 The conies are but a feeble folk, yet make they their houses in the rocks;

28 The spider taketh hold with her hands, and is in kings' palaces.

29 There be three things which go well, yea, four are comely in going:

30 A lion, which is strongest among beasts, and turneth not away for any;

31 A greyhound;2 and an he-goat also; and a king, against whom there is no rising up.

32 If thou hast done foolishly in lifting up thyself, or if thou hast thought evil, "lay thine hand upon thy mouth.

33 Surely the churning of milk bringeth forth courses, braving all dangers—then deceitfully 'reposing on her shadow' in port, as if she had never felt the wind or been tossed upon a wave.—The man secretly destring, and, undeterred by cold-ness or repulse, ardently wooing and winning the maid of his choice; and in the exercise of chastened and holy affections, not only conscious of no guitt, but fully assured of a blessing: these four are the emblems of the adulteress. As the cagle she on her prey descends: as the serpent she glides and poisons her victim; as the ship in the storm she is tossed by passions, yet seems ever in the calm of smiles and blandishments; and with all the ardour of youthful devotedness seeking the object of its hallowed affections will she pursue her guitty courses, and, by aid of a hard-ened conscience (her substitute for innocence), will she 'feast, and wipe her mouth, and say, I have done no wickedness.'—And woe to the lamb when the eagle soars! and woe to the callow bird when the serpent glides! and woe to the sailor-boy who trusts the calm and never foresees the storm! and woe to the man who yields his peace and salvation to the persevering lures, the deceitful smiles, and the hardened conscience of an adulteress!

things as I have. Let me never be a busybody in other men's matters, but heedfully watch against the temptations incident to my own condition. Let me never be an id. spectator of what is around me: but whatever evil I observe, let me avoid, hate, and mourn Col. 3. 5.6; He. 13. 14; Re. 22. 15. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Let me thus always think meanly of myself, and highly of my God and Saviour, and of his works and Word: and be a good savour of Christ to all around me. Earnestly should I covet further degrees of holiness, but be regardless as to the comforts and enjoyments of this life, and content with such butter, and the wringing of the nose bringeth forth blood; 'so the forcing of wrath bringeth forth strife.

2 What, my son? and what, the son of my womb? and what, the son of my vows?

3 Give not thy strength unto women, nor thy ways to that which destroyeth kings.

4 Ita is not for kings, O Lemuel, it is not for kings to drink wine, nor for princes strong drink;

5 Lest they drink, and forget the law, and pervert4 the judgment of any of the afflicted.5

6 ¶ Give strong drink unto him that is ready to perish, and wine unto those that be of heavy hearts.6

7 Let him drink, and forget his poverty, and remember his misery no more.7

8 Open thy mouth for the dumb in the cause of all such as are appointed to destruction.8

10 ¶ Whoj can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies.9

11 The heart of her husband doth safely trust in her, so that he shall have no need of spoil.1

CHAPTER XXXI. Ver. 1. Of Lemuel nothing more is known than what is here recorded: and where there is nothing errain, conjecture is of no service. The word signifies 'God with them;' and if rulers did but know and always feel by whom, and for whom, and to whom they reign, it would ever be the best description of that high office to which 'the powers that be are rediained of God.' C.

Ver. 22. Silk. Rather, linen. It is doubtful if silk was known m Western Asia till long after the time of Christ. C.

Ver. 26. This passage is a beautiful description of a good wife, given of the Lord; but its real excellency lies in being an emblem of the church, opening 'her mouth with wisdom,' and knowing sothing by her ministers but 'Jesus Christ and him crucified.' C.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF PROVERBS.

Solomon, we are told (I Ki. 4. 32), composed no less than three thousand properbs. As we count them, in modern verses, this collection does not contain so The conclusion therefore is, that many have been allowed to pass into many. The conclusion therefore is, that many have been allowed to pass into oblivion, and that we possess but a part. If it be so, this is in no way to be wondered at in the case of Solomon, since we are told (John 20. 30) that, even in the case of 'a greater than Solomon,' 'many other miracles' are stated to have been wrought, which were not specifically recorded by the evangelist. Next to the book of Psalms, the Proverbs of Solomon are most frequently quoted in the New Testament: and that, he it well observed, not merely as a treasure of moral precents but ment; and that, be it well observed, not merely as a treasury of moral precepts, but ment; and that, be it well observed, not merely as a treasury of moral precepts, but as a direct revelation of JESUS as the wisdom of God and the power of God.

If considered merely as a collection of moral precepts for the regulation of fathers, mothers, children, and servants in families—or of kings, magistrates, and subjects in states—it contains more true practical wisdom than all the philosophers of Greece Rome, and more modern times, have ever been able to produce. Nor can there be any question that the ancient and most distinguished philosophers of Greece borrowed the principles of their moral doctrines from these proverbs; and have, in two respects, surpassed the modern deistical moralists: first. in the superjoity of two respects, surpassed the modern deistical moralists; first, in the superiority of origin, which no candid mind can possibly resist.—C.

The book of Proverbs seems naturally divisible into five parts:—1. The first nine The book of Proverbs seems naturally divisible into five parts:—I. The first nine chapters containing various instructions and excitements to the study of the true wisdom—the knowledge of JESUS CHRIST, 'the wisdom of God, and the power of God,' 2. From x.—xxii. 16, which contains what is properly called the Proverbs. 3. From xxii. 17—xxv. inclusive, containing paternal instructions, speaking as unto children. 4. Extends from xxv.—xxix. inclusive, consisting of detached moral precepts, and is distinguished by having been 'copied out' by 'the men of Hezekiah.' 5. Includes xxx. xxxi.; the former containing the prayer and instructions of Agur to Ithiel and Ucal: the other addressed to Lemuel by his mother.

The whole, if considered as a mere literary and philosophical monument of the Hebrews, in the days of their prosperity, would place them as far above 'Greek and Roman glory,' as the sun, in his brightness, is above a flickering and 'sickly taper;' while, independent of all external evidences, the height, the depth, and immaculate purity of their morals, present an internal illustration of their divine origin, which no candid mind can possibly resist.—C.

THE BOOK OF ECCLESIASTES.

To warn others, Solomon here (1) Represents the vanity and vexation which adhere to all created enjoyments; particularly to those in which mea ordinarily look for happiness; as human learning and policy, sensual delights, honour, power, and riches, or an empty profession of religion, ch. i.-vi. (2) Prescribes remedies against that vanity and vexation which attend those things; viz. sitting loose to them; enjoying them moderately, but never expecting much from them; acquiescing in the will of God concerning us in every event; remembering God in the days of our youth; and continuing all our life in his fear and service, with an eye to the future judgment, ch. vii.-xii. But in both parts the demonstrations of the vanity of things, and the prescriptions of remedies, are somewhat mixed.

[This book has been frequently represented as 'Solomon's penitential discourse, composed a little before his death; in which he recants and laments' his follies and departures from God. From whom, or at what time, this opinion originated in the Christian church, we are unable to say: nor is it of any importance to ascertain its origin. To say the least of it, it is altogether unsupported by any scriptural authority! It is also unsupported by any traditional Jewish authority. For the Talmudical writers ascribe the book, not to Solomon, but to Hezekiah; Kimchi, to the prophet Isaiah; while Grotius considers it to have been composed by order of Zerubbabel. Jahn refers it to a period posterior to the Babylonish captivity, and Zirkel to the times of Antiochus Epiphanes; and Jerome informs us, that, on account of some imaginary contradictions, the Jews, after the captivity, were averse to receiving it into the canon of Scripture, till more mature consideration convinced them of their error. That Solomon was the author, is apparent from internal evidence; especially from ch. 1. 12, 16; 2. 4, 6; 12. 9, 10. Of the Christian reader we ask specially that, when entering upon the study of it, he would lay aside all preconceived and unauthorized opinions about the date and object of the book, and come to examine it in a prayerful and teachable spirit. And this matter is more peculiarly necessary than may at first sight appear: for as he that views a landscape through a coloured glass, sees every object tinged with some colour that belongs not to the object, but to the glass; so he that commences the study of this book, under the impression that it is a record of Solomon's personal experience, retractation, and penitence—nay more, a kind of death-bed renunciation of the follies by which his wisdom had been stained—comes with a principle of interpretation that he brings to no other book; that is, an unauthorized determination about what the writer must intend, and not a simple inquiry into the meaning of what he actually says.

In humbly entering upon the interpretation of this book, we therefore cast away every opinion, however current and however supported, about the date and object of this book; and, by the grace of God, seek to ascertain the mind of the Spirit as revealed in its contents. C.]

CHAPTER I.

1 The Preacher showeth that all human courses are vain: 4 vecause the executures are restless in their courses, 9 they bring forth nothing new, and all old things are forgotten, 12 and because he hath found it to be so in the studies of wisdom.

5 The sun also ariseth, and the sun goeth down, and hasteth³ to his place where he arose.

ver. C. Ver. 9. There is no new thing under the sun. There is no-thing new in nature, in moral principles, in sciences, or in arts. New discoveries are but the adoption of principles already in full operation in nature, or the revival of things forgotten. New combinations and applications, however, of old principles there may be, and this is the utmost novelty that human ingenuity may claim. C.

Ver. 13. I gave my heart to seek, &c. Not by vain philosophy, falsely called wisdom; but by that which begins in the 'fear of the Lord,' and embraces all that is revealed of the 'manifold wisdom of God' in Jesus Christ, Ps. 111. 10: Ep. 3. 10. C.

Ver. 15. A world where everything crooked, inconvenient, annoying, adverse, could be made straight—and where everything wanting in wishes, desires, accomplishments, possessions, could be obtained—would not be suited to the present fallen state of man. God has therefore in mercy, while he inflicted the curse, suited this 'sore travail' as a check to the natural and a discipline to the renewed man. C.

pleasure is short-lived, that fame soon passes away, that wealth cannot prolong life, that no source of human enjoyment is or can be lasting. The more man knows of these things—the more he reflects upon them, if he have no higher source of happiness, the more miserable must he become. P.

REFLECTIONS.—How feelingly a true penitent, from his own experience, preaches that vanity and vexation which attend created enjoyments! All things indeed in nature concur to manifest this humbling truth, though it is very hard to convince most men of it: for, can discourse well upon all subjects but one. And such ever is the mere intellectual and moral man, wise upon all subjects but one, the knowledge of God in Christ, I Co. I. 18-24; 2 Co. 5. 19, 20. C.

Ver. 18. The reason of this is that human wisdom can only demonstrate the vamity of all earthly things. It proves that ing, Lo, I am come to great estate, and have gotten "more wisdom than all they that have been before me in Jerusalem; yea, my heart had great' experience9 of wisdom and knowledge.

17 And I gave my heart to know wisdom, and to know madness and folly: I perceived that this also is vexation of spirit.

18 For in much wisdom is much grief; and he that increaseth knowledge increaseth sorrow.

12 ¶ And ¶ turned myself to behold wisdom, and madness, and 7folly.8 for what can the man do that cometh after the king? even that which hath been already done.9

14 They wise man's eyes are in his head; but the fool walketh in darkness: and I myself perceived also *that one event2 happeneth to them

15 Then said I in my heart, As it happeneth to the fool, so it happeneth even to me;3 and why was I then more wise? Then I said in my heart, that this also is vanity.4

16 For there is no remembrance of the wise more than of the fool for ever; seeing that which now is, in the days to come shall all be forgotten: and show dieth the wise man? as the fool.

17 Therefored I hated life; because the work that is wrought under the sun is grievous unto me: for all is vanity and vexation of spirit.

18 ¶ Yea, I hated all my labour which I. had taken⁵ under the sun; because ^hI should leave it unto the man that shall be after me:

19 And who knoweth whether he shall be a wise man or a fool? yet shall he have rule over all my labour wherein I have laboured, and wherein I have showed myself wise under the sun. This is also vanity.

20 Therefore I went about *to cause my heart to despair of all the labour which I took under the sun.

21 For there is a man whose labour is in wisdom, and in knowledge, and in equity; yet to a man that hath not laboured therein shall he leave it for his portion. This also is vanity, and a great evil.

23 For all his days are sorrows, and his travail grief; yea, his heart taketh not rest in the night. This is also vanity.

24 There is nothing better for a man, than that he should eat and drink, and that he should make his souls enjoy good in his slabour. This also I saw, that git was from the hand of

And let this knowledge, which is eternal life, be the chief object of my pursuit.

Ver. 11. How is the joy of ver. 10 to be reconciled with the vexation of ver. 11? Simply thus: all this joy, so far as derived from all his labour, was, when examined by the light of wisdom, nothing but vanity, because it had no real profit; and nothing but vexation, because inseparably mingled with disappointments. C. Ver. 17. Therefore I hated life. GLIMPSE OF SOLOMON'S POOLS. [ECCLESIASTES, fi: 6.]—"I made me pools of water to water therewith the wood that bringeth forth trees." There are three of these pools, and we see in the picture, a sort of half castle and half tavern, which is said to be of Saracenic origin. To the west of this there is a which with three others, supplies the pools with water.

These pools are partly excavated in the rocky bed of the valley, and partly built of large stones. They are so arranged that the bottom of each pool is higher than the top of the one next below it. In this way it is possible to fill every pool with water. According to Josephus, there was a city near Bethlehem which had gardens and rivulets of water, to which Solomon was in the habit of taking a morning drive. These pools are about three miles southwest of Bethlehem.

but to the sinner he giveth travail, to gather, and to heap up, that the may give to him that is good before God. This also is vanity and vexation of spirit.

CHAPTER III.

1 By the necessary change of times, vanity is added to human tra-nil. 11 There is an excellency in God's works. 16 But as for man, God shall judge his works there, and here he shall be like a beast.

O every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven:1

16 ¶ And, moreover, bI saw under the sun the place of judgment, that wickedness was there; and the place of righteousness, that iniquity was there.

17 I said in mine heart, God shall judge the righteous and the wicked: for there is a time there for every purpose, and for every work.

18 ¶ I said in mine heart concerning the estate of the sons of men, that2 God might manifest them, and that they might see that they themselves are beasts.3

19 Forg that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; so that a man hath no preeminence4 above a beast: for all is vanity.

22 \P Wherefore I perceive that there is nothing better, than that a man should rejoice in his own works; for that is his portion: for who shall bring him to see what shall be after him?

CHAPTER IV.

1 Vanity is increased unto men by oppression, 4 by envy, 5 by idleness, 7 by covetousness, 9 by solitariness, 13 by wijulness.

CO Ia returned, and considered all the op-D pressions that are done under the sun: and behold the tears of such as were oppressed, and they had no comforter; and on the side of REFLECTIONS.-Numerous are the contrivances of men to find that in creatures which they should seek and can only find, in God himself. But how vain and vexing are their diversified, their unnumbered, their utmost attempts! Till our souls return to God in utmost attempts! Till our souls return to God in Christ, as our ALL and IN ALL, they will be always like birds wandering from their nests. Thrice happy are they to whom God gives grace to take all things from him; to enjoy him in all things, and all things in him; and to use all things for his glory, and as means of attaching their heart to him and his ways.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 1-11. However disjointed, useless, and afflictive the events of Providence may appear to us, God has connected them together in the most amazing beauty and harmony, and orders the season of each as tends most to advance his glory and the good of the people. And whateverworldly wisdom men may have, they will never be capable of comprehending the astonishing extent of the mysteries which God exhibits to their view in his works of creation and providence. 12, 13. It is therefore best in itself, and a benefit from God, to use worldly enjoyments moderately, and to improve them for the advantage of others. 14. God, in his wisdom and providence, seeks to train and discipline men in righteousness, and therefore we ought not to quarrel with but kindly submit to his pleasure. 15. In every age God, by new returns of things, governs the world with great uniformity of appearances. 16, 17. The very power which he has bestowed upon men as a remedy for grievances, is often used to oppress and injure the innocent; and therefore there must be a future general judgment by God himself, in which all things shall be rectified, by clearing the innocent, rewarding the righteous, and condemning the wicked. 18-21. Affected with these views, I wished that God would make men, particularly those who haughtily oppress others, to consider how mean and brutish they are, and to ponder the nature of that immortal soul which chiefly distinguishes them from beasts, whose life entirely vanishes in death.

Ver. t. 'A time for every purpose,' unfavourable as well as favourable to the man that thinks to get profit of his labour; that is, solid, abiding satisfaction, which he can call, and keep as his own; the one stands at all times over against the other, Ec. 7.

is, solid, audding satisfaction, which he can can, and keep as mis sown: the one stands at all times over against the other, Ec. 7.

14. C.

Ver. 2. A time to plant, &c. Among the horrors of war is the destruction of woods. A great man who had been at much pains to ornament a wild mountain district with buildings and trees, exclaimed when all had been destroyed, 'I care nothing for the house—I can soon raise a new one; but the trees! then will they be grown again!—Note, How grateful should a people be when a land continues to enjoy peace and advance in improvement! This also is of God. C.

Ver. 8. A time to hate. Not a time permitted to hate, but which the carnal mind so perverts, Tit. 3. 3. C.

Ver. 11. More correctly, 'He hath also set eternity in their heart, so that no man can find out the work that God doeth from the beginning to the end.' Luther remarks on this passage: 'Man cannot hit upon the work which God does; that is, no man can know beforehand the hour which is ordained above; and however much he may plague himself, he can never know when it will begin or come to an end. It behoves us therefore to say, O Lord, to thee belongs the supreme direction, in thy hand it rests entirely to order and settle everything in the future; under thy control is my life and my death; so long as I need my life, so long thou givest it. And inasmuch as in respect of them no care or thought is of any use, I will act then in regard to other gifts, using them as they come; care and anxiety I will cast to the winds, and commit all to thee. "P.—Everything beautiful. Among the innumerable evidences of the being and goodness of God, is the beauty which he has so widely diffused. The heavens, the earth, the plants; the birds, the beasts, the insects, the fishes; the eye of affection, and the smile of friendship—all are beautiful—so suited not merely for being, but for well-being, that it is impossible for any but the fool, Ps. 14. 1, to observe them, and remain insensible to the perfections of the Maker of all. C.

Ver. 19. God shall judge the righteous and the wicked. From the present unequal distribution of good and evil, some philosophers have attempted to deduce the doctrine of a future judgment; while others have replied, that if the distribution have continued unequal through so many thousand years, there is therefore the more reason to conclude it will so continue for ever. In the face of this incapacity on the one hand, and sophistry on the other, revelation shows it to be not a questionable inequality of good and evil, but the long-suffering of God with sinners; and establishes the doctrine of future judgment upon his word of truth, and attributes of wisdom and justice. C.

Ver. 22. Rejoice in his oven works. True joy in a man's own works lies (i) In the humble ackfowledgment that he is 'an unprofitable servant,' Lu. 17. 10, for joy ariseth not from a proud assertion of merit. (2) In discovering that while his own works produce no righteousness, a believer is 'justified without the deeds of the law.' Ro. 2.8. (2) In finding that, in all he has wrought, not he but grace has been the real worker, I Co. 13. 10. C.

REFLECTIONS.—We live in a world of changes; but

REFLECTIONS.—We live in a world of changes; but all things outside man's will are governed by God's will. It is absurd then to choose it for our portion, or to take up our restinit. Readily should we believe, that whatever God has given us is best for us, accommodate ourselves to it, and wait with patience for the full unravelling of what seems intricate and perplexed. Yea, to be entirely satisfied with God's providential disposals is highly accommendate. posals is highly necessary, as they neither can

This is also vanity, yea, it is a sore travail.

CHAPTER V.

1 Cautions against abuse in divine service, 8 against murmuring at oppression. 9 The vanity of riches. 18 Joy in riches is the gift of oppression, God.

If EEP thy foot when thou goest to the house of God, and be more ready to hear than to give the sacrifice of fools: for they consider not that they do evil.

2 Bee not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing before God: for God is in heaven, and thou upon earth; therefore let thy words be few.

3 For a dream cometh through the multitude of business; and 'a fool's voice is known by multitude of words.3

4 When, thou vowest a vow unto God, defer not to pay it; "for he hath no pleasure in fools: pay that which thou hast vowed.4

5 Better is it that thou shouldest not vow, than that thou shouldest vow and not pay.

6 Suffer not thy mouth to cause thy flesh to sin; neither say thou before *the angel, 5 that it was an error: wherefore should God be angry at thy voice, and destroy the work of thine hands?

7 For in the multitude of dreams and many words there are also divers vanities:6 buto fear thou God.

8 ¶ If p thou seest the oppression of the poor, and violent perverting of judgment and justice in a province, marvel not at the matter: for he that is higher than the highest regardeth; and there be higher than they.

9 ¶ Moreover, the profit of the earth is for all: the king himself is served by the field.

be altered. And let us study to answer his end in his providences, which is to make us truly religious. Amidst all the changes which we either feel or fear, let us believe and acknowledge the inviolable steadiness of his government. Let us constantly live in the faith of his future judgment of the world, that no oprender us proud, mischievous, or impious. Let us always maintain a deep sense of our own meanness, stupidity, and unruliness before God; and study to use whatever God gives us far our own comfort, and for the real bounds of other real bounds to gives us the real benefit of others.

CHAPTER IV. Ver. r. From viewing the various works and judgment-seats of men, and the common graves of all living things, if returned to examine the oppressions produced in these works, and legalized by the imperfect administration of human fustice; and I found the oppressed and the oppresser alike comfortless.—Note, The books of Judges, of Kings, and of the Prophets abundantly testify, that when a people are oppressed, it is by God's judgments upon their sins; while the examples of Pharaol, Jeroboam, Belshazzar, and others, equally testify that the oppressor is judicially given over to his own ways, that he, in his turn, may become a warning to others in power. C. Ver. 9. Almost all great works have been accomplished by two united spirits. Moses and Aaron, Joshua and Caleb, David and Jonathan, Elijah and Elisha, are striking examples in the Old Testament: and our Saviour is recorded in the New Testament to have sent his disciples 'two and two,' with his divine message of salvation. C.

Ver. 16. 'There is no end to all the people, to all by whom he is made a leader: but they that come after shall not rejoice in him.' That is, the popularity even of the son, not of an old and foolish, but of a young and wise king, may soon pass away: such is the instability of human opinion, and the vanity of human praise. C.

REFLECTIONS.-Into what a hell hath sin turned our earth! Men are often proud of transforming themselves into devils for tormenting their brethren. through want of help and comfort, a man's life is made worse than death or non-existence. And desperately wicked are men when even right and useful works do but rouse their envy. But great is the mercy that God, with whom every right work is accepted, will be our final Judge. Let me then be diligent in business, and work the work of God while it is called to-day. Sloth of any kind tends to make men poor and miserable. But unhappy are they who are selfish and covetous: and who, without any temptation, deny themselves the comforts of life, and make themselves slaves to busi-It is absurd to covet all to themselves, when friendship and social connections are much more calculated to their help, comfort, and improvement. Kings are often but a plague to themselves and their restless people; and tottering honours are rather burdens than advantages.

CHAPTER V. Ver. 1. Keep thy foot. An allusion to un- 1120

covering the feet in the sanctuary of God's presence, Ex. 3.5. The emblem of putting off earthly thoughts and defilements, as it is written, 'Having these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all pollution of the flesh and of the spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God.' C.

Ver. 6. Suffer not thy mouth to cause thy flesh to sin. Let no rash vow of your lips become the occasion of tempting you to any of the works of the flesh, such as covetous regrets after what you have vowed, or proud rivalry in religious offerings with your richer neighbours. See 1 Jn. 2.16; Ga. 5. 10. C.

Ver. 9. The profit of the earth is for all. The poor often enjoying, through an eager and healthy appetite, more than the rich who never knew hunger. So equally does God distribute his favours, and so many the compensations for human wants, ver. 12. C.

REFLECTIONS.-Fearfully are men subjected to vanity; it enters not only into all their outward possessions, but even into their worship! Great need have we to take heed to our hearts, to our lips, and to our whole behaviour, in our religious performances, that they may not become means of dishonouring God and destroying ourselves. But, alas! often are they performed in a foolish and inconsiderate manner, our minds being no more serious in them than in an idle dream; and vows are often rashly made, and no less readily broken, in the view of Jesus and his angels and readily broken, in the view of Jesus and his angels and ministers. Very necessary is the constant faith and deep impression of God's greatness and omniscience, and the future judgment, to make us serious and cirnied with silver; nor he that loveth abundance with increase. This is also vanity.

- 11 When goods increase, they are increased that eat them: "and what good is there to the owners thereof, saving the beholding of them with their eyes?

cumspect in our worship, and for enabling us to behold, or bear up under, oppression and persecution. God makes the highest to live on the same simple things as the poorest. There is very little to profit or please, and much more to hurt and vex in riches, than we commonly think. The rich man's servant often enjoys more benefit by his wealth than the rich man himself, while he suffers none of the vexation! Nay, the covet-ous miser gets no comfort in his wealth, and it is swept away, so that his children never come to the possession of it. Much happier is he who receives whatever he has as God's free gift, and uses it to his glory. Little is he concerned at the evils which befall him in life when God favours him with solid comfort.

CHAPTER VI. Ver. 7, 8. Whatever wealth men gain by their labour is only available for meat, drink, or the like; but can never satisfy their soul, or even their avarice. And in respect to sensual gratification, fools may be as happy as the wisest; and even a poor man, who has common sense and prudence, may, by his industry, render himself and family as happy as the richest. 9, 10. A comfortable enjoyment of that which we have is far preferable to an insatiable desire and restless pursuit after that which we have not .- And, let our condition be what it may on earth, we shall still remain poor frail creatures, subject to manifold miseries: and it will be the utmost wickedness and madness to complain of our lot, or strive with God to get it rectified.

Ver. 2. If 'God giveth him not power to eat,' why doth he, by his Word and Spirit, 'yet find fault?' Because this denial of power to enjoy is not an evil disposition infused, but a judicial sentence passed upon his coverousness—the warming, if he repent not, of another sentence when he will lift up his eyes being in not, of another sentence when he will litt up his eyes being in torments. C.

Ver. 6. Do not all go to one place? Not all spirits, of whom here there is no mention: but all bodies that must return to one thing, the dust; to one place, the grave. C.

Ver. 8. What hath the poor that knoweth to walk among the living? He sees the world, ver. 9, in all its beauty; and though he live on charity, yet if his desires be subdued to his station, he has more enjoyment in the mere sight of mountains, and hills, and fields, and fair dwellings, than their owner can obtain if subject to 'wandering desires.' C.

Debut rectionsMen's riches are often a remarkable.

REFLECTIONS.—Men's riches are often a remarkable curse to them, and render them really more unhappy than the poorest. It is wretched to have wealth and yet no heart to use it for our necessary accommodations And empty are all earthly enjoyments, which can afford no satisfaction to a soul. How unhappy do some men make themselves by the insatiable nature of their own lusts! And yet it is very hard to draw them from a sinful attachment to earthly things, or to per-suade them to use them aright; and especially to bring them to receive the almighty Saviour, and his unsearchable riches, for their everlasting treasure and portion.

CHAPTER VII. Ver. 1. A good reputation is of more advantage for rendering us useful and happy than all the riches, pleasures, and honours of this world: and the day of death, which frees men from the miseries of this world, is preferable to the day of birth, which introduces into a life in which the enjoyments do not sufficiently balance the evils of it. 2-6. It is far safer and more profitable to attend occasions of mourning and faithful reproof, which conduce to make men thoughtful of death and eternity, and render them wise unto salvation; than of revelling, mirth, and folly, which seduce men into heedless dissipation. 7. Grievous oppression will provoke even wise men to unseemly ous oppression will provoke even wise men to unseemly rage and behaviour; and bribes received will corrupt the judgment and pervert the affections of the best.

8. We ought more to regard how a thing turns out at last, than what promising appearances it has at first.

10. In bewailing the evils of our times, we ought carefully to avoid all murmuring at the dispensations of Providence as if they were not equal. Providence, as if they were not equal. 11. When rich men are truly wise, they may do much good to others with their wealth in this world; 12. For both wisdom and wealth may be laid out for our protection and safety; but it is true piety and prudence that promote spiritual comfort and eternal happiness. spiritual comfort and eternal happiness. 13, 14. To prevent murmuring, we ought carefully to observe how wise, just, and powerful God's operations are, and consider ourselves. wise, just, and powerful God's operations are, and consider ourselves incapable of changing, even the most afflictive events of Providence, to our liking. In the time of prosperity we should therefore acknowledge God's goodness, and enjoy the benefit of it; and in the day of adversity we ought to consider the nature, and end of our afflictions, so as to make a good sea of them. for God has disposed them in such variety. use of them: for God has disposed them in such variety, that none might be able to foresee future events in his that none might be able to foresee future events in his particular lot. 15. I have often observed the most pious men sorely afflicted, and apparently miserable in this world; and the most wicked long enjoy an outward prosperity. 16–18. It is therefore necessary that men should avoid all needless scrupulosity and rash zeal not warranted by God's Word, lest it bring them into unnecessary troubles:—and especially should we into unnecessary troubles; -and especially should we avoid, with the utmost care, presumptuous sinning, lest, however he bear with others, it should provoke God quickly to cut us off, and send us to hell in our wickedness.-It is of great use to receive heartily and practise carefully this advice: for it is the true fearer of God who, by a circumspect regard to his law, shall escape both the extremes and their evil consequences. 19, 20. True piety and prudence tend more to direct, help, and protect men, than all human helps; even though the best are liable to manifold failings. Human wisdom may judge of things present and obvious, but not of things future and mysterious. 25. I attempted a most careful and comprehensive search into (jod's providences, and men's counsels, conduct, and sinfulness; 26. And with grief and shame, I find that nothing more effectually entices and fixes men in guilt and ruin than a whorish woman. It is only by the remarkable mercy of God, and the most earnest and watchful piety, that one can either avoid or escape from her temptations; and often it is that those who have otherwise offended him are ruined by her 27, 28. Ver. 1. Precious ointment. Many unguents were of very great value among the Jews, as appears from Jn. 12. 3, where a single pound was estimated at about £9, 13t. 6d. British. Taking then a Roman penny at 7½d. or 7½d. for the daily wages of a labourer, Mat. 20. 12, 13, and comparing it with modern wages in the neighbourhood of cities, the price of the ointment will be greatly in-

REFLECTIONS.—A truly good character is very valuable, and ought to be sought for and maintained with the greatest care. Happy is the death of those who die in the Lord! Let us then live much in the serious consideration of our last end. Christian reproofs are highly requisite to make or keep us grave and serious, 4 Where the word of a king is, there is power; and who may say unto him, What doest thou?

 5 Whoso's keepeth the commandment shall feel no evil thing; fand a wise man's heart discerneth both time and judgment.

 6 Because to every purpose there is time and judgment, therefore the misery of man is great upon 5him.

 7 For he knoweth not that which shall be:

 for who can tell him when it shall be?

 8 There is no man that hath power "over the spirit to retain the spirit; neither hath he power in the day of death: and there is no discharge in that war; neither shall wickedness deliver those that are given to it. deliver those that are given to it.

11 ¶ Because" sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil.

12 Though a sinner do evil an hundred times, and his days be prolonged, yet surely I know that "it shall be well with them that fear God, which fear before him:

13 But it shall not be well with the wicked. neither shall he prolong his days, which *are as a shadow; because he feareth not before God.

14 There is a vanity which is done upon the earth; "that there be just men, unto whom it happeneth according to the work of the wicked: again, there be wicked men, to whom it happeneth according to the "work of the "righteous. I said, that this also is vanity.

15 Then I commended mirth, because a man hath no better thing under the sun, than to eat, and to drink, and to be merry; for that shall abide with him of his labour the days of his life, which God giveth him under the sun.

16 ¶ When I applied mine heart to know wisdom, and to see the business that is done upon the earth; (for also there is that neither day nor night seeth sleep with his eyes;)4

17 Then I beheld all the work of God, that a man cannot find out the work that is done under the sun; because though a man labour to seek it out, yet he shall not find it: yea farther, though a wise man think to know it, yet shall he not be able to find it.

CHAPTER IX

1 Like things happen to good and bad. 4 There is a necessity of death unto men. 7 Comfort is all their portion in this life. 11 God's providence ruleth over all. 13 Wisdom is better than strength.

OR alla this I considered in my heart, even to declare all this, bthat the righteous, and the wise, and their works, are in the hand of amidst so much folly and so many flashes of vain mirth as take place in the world. The very worst of things effectually work for the good of the saints. And a enectually work for the good of the saints. And a humble and patient resignation to the will of God makes us easy under the most grievous adversity and oppression. Christian wisdom and prudence tend opprission. Christian wisdom and prudence tend greatly to our direction, safety, happiness, and strength.

—They teach us to view God's hand in all that betalls us; to accommodate ourselves to every providence as it comes; and neither to be offended with the prosperity of the wicked nor the adversity of the godly in this life; to guard against all extremes: and, under a deep sense of our own faults, to carry ourselves mildly toward others who are overtaken in a fault. How short-sighted are the wisest of mortals with respect to short-sighted are the wisest of mortals with respect to snort-significa are the wisest of mortals with respect to the most important objects! But great is the mercy if they are brought to see their own leading follies and crimes, and, by the sight thereof, are led to repent-ance, to a deep sense of the riches of God's grace, and to search out the sinfulness of their heart and nature, till they apprehend themselves utterly vile before God.

CHAPTER VIII. Ver. 1. How few are truly wise, and can rightly take up or expound the words or works of God? And yet it is wisdom that renders a man truly honourable, mild, and majestic. a king ought to be obeyed, not only from fear of the penalty, but from regard to God, whose deputy he is, and to the oath of allegiance sworn to him by the name and in the presence of God as witness and gradien of 2. The laws of and in the presence of God, as witness and guardian of never, through passion or discontent, withdraw from his service or cast off our allegiance; for, his power being so great, it is very dangerous to contend with Vol. 2-35 him. 4. A king has power to enforce his commands; and none can oppose him without apparent danger.

5. He who prudently complies with the king's pleasure in lawful things, shall avoid the trouble and danger which he would otherwise incur. And it will require wisdom to direct in what time and manner we may deal with him to the heat advantage.

4. For through deal with him to the best advantage. 6. For through inattention to the proper time and to proper direction in managing matters, men bring much trouble upon themselves: 7. For they are generally ignorant what things are to happen, and of the time in which what they expect will come to pass. 8. None, neither by force nor entreaty, nor by wickedness, are capable of preventing the removal of their soul from this world in one way or another, so it becomes all to be ready.

9. I have observed that rulers by their management often bring guilt and ruin upon themselves. Io. I have observed wicked rulers, notwithstanding the greatest funeral pomp, quickly forgotten in the very city in which they had often, in God's name, administered independent of the control of the co iudgment. So vain and perishing are all the pomp and power of the greatest. 11. Because God in mercy sometimes delays to punish open transgressors of his power of the greatest. law, hardened sinners, in a most presumptuous manner, abandon themselves to all manner of mischief and wickedness. 12. But though the sinner's days of reprieve, or even of prosperity, should be prolonged for a time, yet it is only they who truly fear God and walk in his ways that will be happy at last.

13. Wicked despisers of God shall not enjoy the true comforts of life, and shall be quickly hurried into misery here or hereafter. 14. It is, however, afflicting that some eminent saints are reproacned, persecuted, and distressed in this world, while some ringleaders in wickedness meet with kind usage and remarkable prosperity. This makes it evident, that nothing is more proper than soberly and thankfully to enjoy what God in his providence bestows upon us in this world, as all the reward that we can gain by our labour. 16, 17. It is best to refrain from curious inquiries into the reasons, ends, and meaning of God's dispensations; for after the most diligent, curious, and persevering search, I find they will still remain unsearchable to men.

most diligent, curious, and persevering search, I find they will still remain unsearchable to men.

Ver. 2-5. That 'the king' was a title of Messiah familiar is the days of Solomon, is obvious from Ps. 2.6; 21, 14, 6: 45.1, 6; 98.6, &c.; and there are such characteristics in this passage as clearly prive that Jesus is 'the King' whom Solomon prophetically honours. Thus in ver. 3. He doeth whatsoever phetically honours. Thus in ver. 3. He doeth whatsoever pleaseth him. Now this neither David, nor Solomon, not Darius, Da. 6.14, nor indeed the most despotic monarch on earth, ever could effect: then, to Solomon's King none may say, 'What doest thou?' But never was there an earthly king without some one honest enough, or bold enough, or factious enough, or duestion his acts. Above all, he who keepeth the commandment of Solomon's King 'shall feel no evil,' a lot which no earthly king enjoys himself, nor can bestow upon any of his subjects. But all these things the King in Zion can do, and all these blessings his subjects enjoy. C.

Ver. 9. This kurt arises (t) From the mental perturbation that every ungodly and unkind superior must experience. (2) From that human retaliation which the injustice of despotic rule so often provokes. (3) From these judgments which an all-wise and merciful God who suffers long, does yet in justice finally bring down upon the wicked. C.

Ver. 15. This is no libertine insimuation, as some imagine, imperishable monuments of their fame—died, and were forgotten—leaving nough but a new proof that 'all is vainty.' C. Ver. 15. This is no libertine insimuation, as some imagine, but, when scripturally interpreted, a plain statement of an imprortant truth. There is no doubt a 'laughter of fools,' and 'the end of that mirth is heaviness,' Pr. 14. 13; but there is also a mirth which forms an essential or concomitant part of God's worship, Ps. 100. 1, 2; Ne. 8. 6, 9-12; Ja. 5. 3; and it is of that mirth, with the thankful and temperate use of what men 'eat or drink,' that Solomon here speaks. C.

God: one man knoweth either love or hatred by all that is before them.

- 2 Alla things come alike to all: there is one event to the righteous, and to the wicked; to the good, and to the clean, and to the unclean; to him that sacrificeth, and to him that sacrificeth not: as is the good, so is the sinner; and he that sweareth, as he that feareth an oath.2

 6 Also their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished; neither have they any more a portion for ever in any thing that is done under the sun.

12 For^b man also knoweth not his time: as the fishes that are taken in an evil net, and as the birds that are caught in the snare; so are the sons of men snared in an evil time, when it falleth suddenly upon them.

13 This wisdom have I seen also under the sun, and dit seemed great unto me:

14 There was a little city, and few men within it; and there came a great king against it, and besieged it, and built great bulwarks against it:

15 Now there was found in it a poor wise man, and he by his wisdom delivered the city: yet no man remembered that same poor man.1

16 Then said I, Wisdom is better than strength: gnevertheless the poor man's wisdom is despised, and his words are not heard.2

17 The words of wise men are heard in quiet more than the cry of him that ruleth among fools.

18 Wisdom' is better than weapons of war: but jone sinner destroyeth much good.

REFLECTIONS .- What excellency in himself-usefulness among neighbours—honour among friends—and courage among enemies—the true knowledge and fear of God give to a man! But it is foolish and sinful to disregard the laws of our rulers; to be forward in find-ing fault with their administrations; to persist in faults pointed out to us; or to neglect proper methods of obtaining redress of our grievances. Subjection to magistrates is highly necessary, not only for conscience' sake, but even for avoiding their wrath and securing our own comfort. Certain and irresistible in themselves, though uncertain in their circumstances, are troubles and death to sinful men. But when we see wicked men prosper while the godly are oppressed, there is need of patience and of looking by faith to the unseen, the eternal issue of things! and, in the mean-while, to make the best use we can of what we meet with, and leave it to the Lord to comprehend and manage his own mysterious works.

CHAPTER IX. Ver. 1. No man knoweth either love or hatred, &c. No man can tell from prosperity that God loves him, nor from adversity that God hates him. Yet let no one ignorantly say, We have then no means of ascertaining whether God loves us or not. No one can so imagine when he reads Jn. 14.23; 1 Jn. 31, 31, 31, 21, 4.13, 16. C.

Ver. 2. The 'one event' that is common to all is death, see last clause of ver. 3; and 'this evil under the sun' exists as a perpetual memorial of the fall of man, an awful warning of 'the judgment to come'—a dungeon of darkness (sorrow) to the wicked, and a door of hope and joy to the children of God. C.

Ver. 4. A living dog is better than a dead lion. The 'dead lion' was the guardian emblem of the throne of Solomon, 2 Ch. 9. 18, 19, and although 'the like were not made in any kingdom,' yet 'a living dog,' though an unclean and despised animal, would by his mere barking or assault have done more to guard the monarch than the twelve dead lions by which the ascent of Solo-by his mere barking or assault have done more to guard the monarch than the twelve dead lions by which the ascent of Solomon's throne was protected. C.

Ver. 5. The memory of them [the dead] is forgotten. Is this consistent with fact? Is the memory of a goed or a bad man's actions may be preserved in history and trumpeted by fame; but the memory of every man—the memory of personal affection—the only real memory of the man—is altogether forgotten—his children cease to weep for him—and his grandchildren perhaps knew him not. C.

Ver. 10. 'What a life I have spent in laboriously doing nothing 'was the melancholy reflection of a learned man on his death-bed. And so must it be with the most diligent, if he do not embrace the four departments to which Solomon directs the intellectual and active energies—work, device, knowledge, wisdom. Time spent in bodilly works but trains an animal: time spent in artful devices but fosters a serpent; time spent in worldly knowledge but collects a library: it is, when neglecting neither of these, man 'applies his heart to wisdom,' that he puts forth 'all his might,' and fulfils, through grace, the great ends of his creation. C.

Ver. 11. Chance. The meaning of this much-abused word may be found by contrasting the end of ver. 11 with the end of ver. 12, where 'evil time' and 'suddenly' are expository of 'time and chance.' Chance therefore signifies, not what is below or above the direction of Providence, but what comes unexpectedly and suddenly upon thoughtless ignorant men. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is a great mercy to believers that they, and all their works, are in the hand and under the influence of God, their reconciled Father.

under the influence of God, their reconciled Father. Yet how often does he use them with as much severity in this world as if they were the most profligate sinners!

when Providence so little distinguishes the righteous here in their condition either in life or in death. markable are the advantages which men have in this life for bettering their states, tempers, or hopes. But quickly death puts an end to them all! to all opportunities of preparing for eternity; and to all our inti-macies, enjoyments, or affections in this world. What need then have we soberly to relish the comforts of this life, relative to our spirits, our food, our raiment, and our relations. Quickly should we work out our salva-tion with fear and trembling while we have opportu-nity, as we know not how soon our soul may be re quired of us. Carefully should we acknowledge God. and depend on him for direction in all our paths, as without his assistance we can obtain nothing good, but must fall into misery and ruin. Yet how stupid are most men, who neither regard wisdom itself, nor those who thereby do them the greatest services! It is necessary that we should always act from regard to the authority of God, and from a principle of love, as men may perhaps disregard the best works that we can do for them. But much more useful are wise discourses than all the noisy harangues which fools admire. even one impenitent and presumptuous sinner is often a great plague to a family, a church, or nation.

Very often, to the great hurt of the subjects, magistrates employ, as their deputies and agents, persons of a weak or mercenary spirit, while persons of ability and true dignity are overlooked and contemned. 8. Both prince and people have need to beware of innovations; for he that endeavours to ensnare and ruin another shall thereby perish himself: and endowments, and who use the enjoyments of life, business. 18. Ver. 1. Folly. Solomon means by folly, (1) Childishness, Pr. 22. 11, that is, waywardness of temper, being easily disturbed; preference of toys to things of real value; and preference of amusement and self-will to learning and due control. (2) Want of prudent forecast, Pr. 13. 14. (3) Deceifulness, Pr. 14. 2. (4) A hasty temper, Pr. 14. 29. (5) Peleasure in other men's folly, Pr. 15. 21. (6) Rejecting good advice, Ec. 4. 12. When folly is employed to designate the highest criminality, as De. 22. 21; Jos. 7. 15; Ho. 2. 10, it can easily be reduced to one or more of these heads. C.

Ver. 2. The wise man honours his heart; that is, his affections and their objects, by placing them at his right hand, the position of honour. The fool degrades all that he should hold dear. C.

Ver. 9. That is, he that doeth these things fraudulently and violently, as in digging a pit, or breaking a hedge, ver. 8. C.

Ver. 11. This translation is founded on the general opinion of 'serpent-charming' by music being a reality and not a juggling imposition: a matter still undecided. May not the verse be translated, 'Surely the serpent will bite without histing' (that is to give warning of danger): 'and a calumniator is no better?' C.

Yer. 16. Either really a child, a minor, under a selfish regency, living in luxury, and abusing their power; or one of those who are always children, and never attain to the majority of meellect, because never acquainted with the Son of God, who alone can make men free, Jn. 8. 32, 36. C.

Ver. 20. Solomon warns against an uncharitable thought, because it would soon break out into a voice, and certainly be discovered. And thus he admonishes, not for the sake of a factitious loyalty, but because he that frets himself into cursing the king will speedily be in danger of cursing his God. See Is.8. 21.—Note, The bird is most probably a reference to the use of carrier pigeons for speedy and secret missives. C.

REFLECTIONS,-Men of character have need to be careful, lest they should inadvertently ruin it. Many are extremely ill qualified for the business they take in are extremely in qualined for the business they take in hand; and imprudently expose their own folly and wickedness. But it is very dangerous when either rulers or subjects leave their proper stations and attempt violent changes of the public settlement. Vain and imprudent talking is often attended with the most hurtful consequences. It is necessary then to have our words always with the consequences always with the second station. ful consequences. It is necessary then to have our words always with grace, seasoned with salt. An imprudent management of their business frequently robs men of both the comfort and the benefit thereof. do all diligently and prudently attend to their proper work, and act according to their station, neither doing nor speaking evil, but provoking one another to love and to good works.

CHAPTER XI. Ver. 1, 2. Cheerfully lay out thyself to bestow the necessaries of life upon the poor, who are entirely unable to requite thee; and so God shall plentifully reward thee for it in this life, or in that which is to come. And however great the number of needy objects be, bestow that which is necessary upon them all, according to thine utmost ability; for the opportunity of liberality may soon be lost to thee, and an evil time may quickly come, in which thou wilt infinitely need God to be the supplier of thy own wants. 3, 4. He bestows plenty upon men, in order that with it they may do good to others. And however undeserving the objects be on whom they religiously bestow their charity, they shall not lose their reward.—They that withhold it till every objection be answered, will never bestow it.

Life and its comforts are desirable: but let men enjoy created comforts as long as they may, the lasting period of troubles, death, and eternity will infallibly succeed, and manifest the emptiness and insufficiency of all outward enjoyments. 9, 10. Whatever tempta-tions young persons may have to indulge their own foolish and wicked inclinations and fancies, let them remember, with the deepest concern, that God will, in his awful judgment, call them to account for every part of their conduct. Let them take care to prevent those perplexities and miseries which sinful indulgence will at last bring upon them; for all the empty and short-lived pleasures of youth can never in the least balance the dangers of inexpressible and everlasting misery.

Ver. 1. Cast thy bread upon the waters. Some interpret thus:

Cast thy bread-corn (seed upon the waters, as rice is said to be sown in Egypt; others, 'Sow thy bread-corn (seed) before the coming of the waters,' that is, before the rainy season. But as the word translated waters signifies multitudes, may not the meaning rather be, 'Cast thy bread (give forth thy spiritual instruction) before the face of the multitudes?' See Mat. 5. 1, as contrasted with the portions or more specific instructions prescribed in the second verse. C.

Ver. 3. The clouds of heaven water alike the desert and the garden, obeying chemical laws; and if a tree fall toward north or south, there it abides, obeying mechanical laws; how surely then should the intellectual and spiritual man obey the laws of his condition, and fulfil these beneficent purposes for which God has endowed him? C.

Ver. 9. This is no irony, as some have imagined: it is a simple and beautiful lesson. 'Rejoice in thy youth?' not in thy folkes and lusts, 2 Tl. 2. 22. 'Let thy heart,' thine own conscience, and not vain companions, 'cheer thee' in thy course. 'And walk in the ways of thin heart'—thy conscience—not in the darkness of them that close their eyes, lest they should see, Mat. 13. 15.

*And know thou, God will bring thee into judgment'—the judgment, not of condemnation, but of 'Well done, good and faithful servant,' Mat. 25. 23. C.

portant duty is that of giving to the poor! a more certain mean of making men rich. jections, drawn from our right to what we have, from the narrowness of our circumstances, from the discouragements which we have already met with in it, or from our not knowing how it can be made up to us, ought to make us neglect so much as one opportunity of charity. But, above all, it is most sinful and foolish for either old or young to indulge their lusts, and live unconcerned about Jesus Christ and his salvation, when heavy troubles, an important death, an awful judgment, and an endless eternity are before them, and they know not how near!

CHAPTER XII. Ver. I. Now, in youth, seriously think of, believe in, and serve the Divine Persons, who made, preserve, and redeem men, before the disquieting and disqualifying infirmities of old age come upon you: 2. Before the comforts of life, which render it agreeable, be withdrawn, and the powers of your mind and senses of your body be rendered almost useless, and the calamities of old age rise successively one after another: 3. When your head, arms, and hands shall shake, through weakness or palsy; your once strong shoulders stoop, and your legs and thighs bow under their weight; your teeth be generally lost, and your eyes sunk in their sockets and become dim; 4. Before your lips be but a little opened to eat or talk, because of the loss or looseness of teeth; before you be incapable to walk in the streets; your rest broken, and every little noise awaken you; your lungs fail, your voice become inharmonious and harsh, and your ears dull and regardless of music; 5. Before you, unable to climb, become afraid to mount or move on high, nay, are afraid of falling in the common way; before your hair become white; the least noise or weight become burdensome, and the lightest food load your stomach; and there be no inclination to or delight in former pleasures, because you draw nigh to the grave and the other world, when your friends shall lament their loss, and the hired mourners publicly

And your body be laid in the grave, to moulder into dust, and your soul appear to be judged before God who formed it.—11. The words of the prophets, and other holy men of God, are fitted to excite men's attention, awaken their conscience, and quicken their affections; and to make a powerful and lasting impression on their hearts, and so settle and establish them in the truth;—being inculcated by zealous teachers of the church, sent and qualified by Jesus Christ, the alone Head of his church

Ver. 3. Keepers. The hands become more or less paralytic. Strong men—the vertebræ of the upright youtn shall bend. The grinders—the teeth, a name by which the double-teeth are familiarly known. Those that look out of the windows—the optic nerves and humours of the eye. C.

Ver. 5. Afraid of ascents, because of debility. 'The almond-tree shall flourish—the hair shall become white as the almond-blossom; or rather, shall fall off. 'The grasshopper' or locust, almost light as air that needs not his support, and instanlly flies away. 'Desire' of food, company, music, fair prospects, &c. C.

Ver. 11. In ver. to the Preacher bears testimony to the purity and truth, that is, the plenary inspiration of the book which he is now completing. In ver. 11 he takes in a wider range. He testifies to the perfection of 'the words of the wise,' that is, of the whole of the sacred books then in existence. They are as goads, piercing sharp and deep. The second clause of the verse is not so clear. It is probable that there is here an example of that parallelism which is characteristic of Hebrew poetry, and that this clause corresponds with the preceding. Its meaning may be: 'The participators in the collection;' i.e. those who wrote or compiled the collection of sacred books, 'are as nails driven in.' The last clause of the verse states the origin of both the sacred books and the sacred writers: 'they are given by one Shepherd,' by the Lord. P.

mities and troubles of old age, and the fears and pangs of death, in the full assurance that Jesus loved them, and gave himself for them! But, alas! how difficult is it to persuade us of the emptiness of all created things! This truth needs to be inculcated a thousand times over. Nor will that avail, unless the Holy Ghost inscribe it on our heart. It is necessary then that all preachers should be sent and qualified by Christ and his Spirit; and that, by every possible mean, they should labour to fix the truths of God in the conjudgment.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF ECCLESIASTES.

The most common view of the Book of Ecclesiastes represents it as 'a philosophical inquiry after the summum bonum, or chief good of man; in which Solomon states the various opinions on the subject, the result of his own dear-bought expertence in search of the respective enjoyments of human wisdom and human folly.'
Without altogether excluding this view, others think Solomon's main design was prove the immortality of the soul, or rather the necessity of another state after this life, by such arguments as may be deduced from reason and experience.'

Now, in all this, it is not a little remarkable—it is not a little lamentable—the never seems to have occurred to the learned authors of these opinions, that Christ and his church formed any direct object of Solomon's investigation! Yet how strange if the wiest man could have written a book in which the 'Wisdom of God' obtained no place!

'Much of the obscurity, it has been observed, which is generally admitted to exist in the book of Ecclesiastes, arises from not attending to the train of argument proposed by Solomon, which difficulty the ordinary division of chapters and verses is supposed to have contributed to increase' (Horne's Introduction).

Is supposed to have contributed to increase' (Horne's Introduction).

Now that, like other portions of Scripture, the book of Ecclesiastes contains some or many things 'hard to be understood,' cannot be denied. But has not its peculiar obscurities arisen from neglecting the beams of 'the Sun of Righteousness' shining so brightly in all its pages, rather than from any inattention to the mere train of a philosophical argument? That Ecclesiastes is a book of argument is admitted; but not in any other sense than that in which the Epistles to the Romans, Galatians, and Hebrews are books of argument. That is, the statements, illustrations, and conclusions are never of man, but from the Spirit of God.

If by 'wisdom' is to be understood anything less than the knowledge that 'God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself,' 2 Co. 5. 19, then, indeed, is the book of Ecclesiastes not only obscure, but often unintelligible. But if the 'wisdom' sought and commended by Solomon be the knowledge of 'Christ, the wisdom of God,' then the obscurity of the book becomes illuminated, and 'he may run that readeth it,' Hab. 2. 2.

ordinarily adopted—a principle neither warranted by anything in the book itself, nor by authority of any other book of Holy Scripture. This principle is the assumption that the book 'was written by Solomon in his old age, after he had repented of his sinful practices; and when, having seen and observed much, as well repented of his simul practices; and when, having seen and observed much, as well as having enjoyed everything that he could wish, he was fully convinced of the vanity of everything but piety towards God' (Horne's Introduction). Now, that Solomon wrote the book at an advanced period of his reign, is obvious from ch. 2. 4-II; but though all his recorded labours terminate in 'vexation,' there is not one single reference to any special 'sinfulness' in his pursuits—an omission totally inconsistent with the genius of Scripture, which never fails in the most direct acknowledgment and condemnation of the sins of its chiefest characters. Had the book, therefore, been a confession of sin and retractation of error, these must have acknowledgment and condemnation of the sins of its chiefest characters. That the book, therefore, been a confession of sin and retractation of error, these must have furnished its most plain and prominent statements. Sin would have been called sin, and not mere 'vanity and vexation of spirit;' for these words, however strong and expressive, come far short of that self-abasement and abhorrence which the consciousness of sin against God must produce, whenever his Spirit leads the sinner to repentance.

The conclusion, therefore, is inevitable—Ecclesiastes is neither an acknowledgment nor retractation of sin in the inspired author, but an illustration of the insufficiency of all 'treasures on earth' for the purpose of inducing men to 'lay up their treasures in heaven,' to 'set their affections on things above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God.'

But the chief source of obscurity may be detected in two principles that would reduce light itself into darkness,—the first, taking words in a sense the writer never intended,—the second, interpreting by figures of speech that he never employed. Examples of the first may be found in the meaning attached to 'good' in ch. 2. 24, and 3. 13, &c., where the real good intended is commonly referred to unlimited sensual indulgence; and the second is exemplified ch. 11. 9, where a plain and godly admonition is commonly interpreted as a bitter irony.

In the preceding notes these arbitrary principles of interpretation have been altogether rejected; and, in subordination to the teaching of the Spirit, the book has been treated as its own expositor.—C.

THE SONG OF SOLOMON

Could not be a nuptial hymn composed in honour of any of his wives; for it was not composed till after the tower of Lebanon was built, ch. 7. 4; and so not till about twenty years after his marriage with Pharaoh's daughter. Many of the emblems used in it—as to be made a keeper of the vineyard, to have a head like Carmel, a nose like the tower of Lebanon, eyes like fish-pools, teeth like a flock of sheep, and to be terrible as an army with banners, &c. -- if applied to a fine lady, are absurd to the last degree: but if the whole be understood of the union and fellowship between Christ and his people, it will appear most exalted, instructive, and animating. The name of God is not found in it, more than in Esther; nor could the continued allegory of the book well admit of it. But the agreement of its matter and language with other passages of Scripture—as ls. 54.5; 62.4,5; Ho. 2.19, 20; Mat. 25.1-10; 9.15; 3.9; Ro. 7.4; 2 Co. 11.2; Ep. 5.32; Re. 19.7; 21. 2, 9; and especially with Ps. xlv.; its majestic style; its efficacy on the consciences of men for promoting their spiritual comfort and holiness; the sincerity of the bride in acknowledging her faults; and in fine, the general reception of it by the Jewish and Christian churches; sufficiently prove it inspired of God. To such as read it with a carnal and wanton mind, it will be the savour of death unto death: but to such as, acquainted with fellowship with Christ, peruse it with a spiritual and heavenly frame, it will prove a savour of life unto life, a counterpart of their gracious experience. It is a dialogue; in which the speakers are Jesuc Christ, the blessed Bridegroom of souls; the church, which is his body and bride, and every particular saint in it; and the daughters of Jerusalem or Zion, who are either nominal professors of the true religion, or at best young and weak converts. The scope of it is to represent Christ and his people's mutual esteem of, desire after, and delight in one another. And as the bride denotes either the church in general, or a particular believer, the members, &c., attributed to her must have different significations assigned them, according as the one or the other is understood.

[The title of this book, 'The Song of Songs,' is generally understood to assert its eminence amongst or superiority over all other songs. Some eminent Hebraists, however, are disposed to translate the title 'The Series of Songs;' and this seems more consonant to the modesty of the sacred writer, who would be very unlikely to assume any special eminence, also to that equality which divine inspiration implies amongst the books of Scripture, as well as to the structure of the book itself, which changes so rapidly its speakers, time, place, and objects.

The ancient Jews, without exception, considered it a book divinely inspired, and inserted it in their sacred writings. By our Lord it was consequently authorized, when he exhorted the Jews to 'search the Scriptures;' and by Paul, when he affirmed that 'all Scripture is given by inspiration of God.' With the full conviction of its divine origin, it was newly translated into Greek, in the second century, by three eminent Christian divines; and in the third, it was inserted by Origen in his Hexapla, who also wrote some discourses explanatory of its sacred meaning.

Notwithstanding this concurrence, its divine authority is said to have been questioned in the fifth century by Theodore of Mopsuestia; and occasionally, down to the present day, various objections against its inspiration have been started by Christian divines. Now, without questioning either the objects or the principles of these objectors, it is not a little to be lamented that their learning has been so misapplied. For if the reception of the book by the Jewish church, and its approbation by our Lord and his apostles, be not, to a Christian, sufficient evidence of its divine authority, any higher evidence it must be impossible to obtain; and if this evidence is to be rejected in the case of one book, there is no ground for its sufficiency in the case of any other.

The objections to the divine authority of this book have arisen, as in the case of Ecclesiastes, from assuming an unauthorized principle of interpretation, and pronouncing the book a mere marriage song, and consequently unfitted for religious instruction. But again, whereas in Ecclesiastes, a book confessedly didactic, the ordinary and natural application of words has been rejected—in the Song of Solomon, a book confessedly written in similitudes or parables, the emblematic application of words has been rejected.

The Christian disciple will, however, make light of these cavils, and calmly repose upon the authentication of the book derived from Christ and his apostles And while so reposing, he will find a treasury filled to overflowing with the unsearchable riches of Christ. He will be led into a banqueting-house of boundless hospitality; he will mingle with a company of purity and love; he will traverse gardens of loveliest flowers and sweetest odours; he will repose beneath trees with coolest shade and ripest fruits; thence will he climb the Lebanon heights of contemplation, and gaze upon the lovely land that lies beneath his feet, the land of his inheritance and his home, where Christ is the King, saints the subjects, and love the law; where the subjects themselves are kings and priests unto God, clad in the robes of the Lamb's immaculate righteousness, and crowned with the diadem of his unfading glory.

Some eminent interpreters have considered this book as a sacred drama extending through seven days, and have divided it into scenes, each of a day's continu-Others have concluded it to be a succession of idyls, or little poems, with no connection of time, place, or person: but merely possessing some common object as their only principle of union.

In the following notes these principles of interpretation will be diffidently- on account of their authors-but firmly rejected, from their want of any but conjectural authority. The principles of interpretation adopted will be (1) The grammatical, including the singularity, or plurality, or sexes of the speakers. (2) Change of place. (3) Change of time. (4) Change of objects. (5) Change of sentiment or action. (6) The parallel—comparing spiritual with spiritual, explaining what here is unknown by what is elsewhere acknowledged. By following these natural principles, the book will be found a succession of beautiful, impressive, and instructive emblems of natural pictures, representing spiritual originals—an outward form of what is earthly, fabricated for little children, but with an inward spirit of what is only intended for perfect men. CHAPTER I. Ver. 2. Blessed Jesus, upon whom I have been meditating, by thy Word and Spirit give me intimate fellowship with thee in thy ordinances, and full assurances of thy friendship: for the manifestations of thy redeeming love are more pleasant, reviving, and strengthening to my soul than any created enjoyments. 3. Such is the pleasant and powerful influence of thy mediatorial excellencies, offices, relations, and fulness of spirit and grace, that sincere and holy souls cannot but love thee with their whole heart. 4. By thy almighty influence direct and bring me into the nearest enjoyment of thyself, that I, and others excited by me, may pleasantly comply with thy alluring power, and follow hard after thee in the paths of duty.— Jesus, the King of his church, has already brought me into the most ravishing nearness to and spiritual intimacy with himself; therefore will we rejoice in him as our ALL and IN ALL; we will think of, believe, and extol his love above all created delights: for every candid and sincere professor heartily esteems, loves, and delights in thee. 5. In myself, and in respect of manifold infirmities, scandals, reproaches, and persecutions, I am deformed; but in my Head Christ, and as clothed with his righteousness, and endued by his Spirit, gifts, and graces, I am truly comely, O ye nominal professors and weak believers :- I am outwardly mean, but inwardly rich and glorious. 6. Look not therefore upon me with disdain, disaffection, or delight in my distresses, nor stumble at religion on account of them; for sore persecutions, tribulations, and temptations are befallen me: hypocritical professors, false teachers, and my own inward corruptions, enraged at my connection with Christ, and my cleaving to him, have oppressed me with the basest drudgery and entangled me in carnal cares and secular affairs. which have hindered me from, or retarded me in, the due improvement of my own office, opportunities, gifts, and graces. 7. But, O all-compassionate Redeemer, whom I love with my whole heart, and above everything else, discover to me, by thy Word and Spirit, which is thy true church, and which are those assemblies wherein thou art remarkably present, and to whom thou affordest spiritual support and consolation amidst all their scorching persecutions and troubles: for why should I, whom thou hast redeemed, and who have sincerely devoted my whole self to thee, be left to associate myself with empty professors, false teachers, and inward idols, who, notwithstanding their pretences

CHRIST. 8. O ye excellent ones of the earth, beautified with my salvation, righteousness, and grace, and whose church state is adorned with my ordinances, if your knowledge of duty be still indistinct, inquire after, observe, and follow the example of the saints in former and present ages; and let weak believers and young converts, with their weak or languishing graces, carefully attend my public ordinances dispensed by my faithful pastors. 9. And be encouraged in my love; for, notwithstanding the weakness which you feel, and the self-deformity which you discover, I your Redeemer and Husband have, and will render you comely and active, and will give you sufficient strength and courage to withstand and conquer your spiritual enemies, if you will only be faithful. 10. Whilst your church state is beautifully adorned by divine oracles, ordinances, gifts, and graces, professors, and ministers, your particular conversation before the world appears beautifully marked with a variety of precious and holy qualities, and your faith, by which you are united to my person as your faith, by which you are united to my person as your Head, is precious and glorious in itself, and is productive of every good word and work. II. And I, my Father, and the blessed Spirit will for ever continue and increase these spiritual ornaments in true believers.

BELIEVERS. 12. O that we may enjoy these blessed and ornamenting operations of thy grace! For, whilst thou, Jesus, dost converse familiarly with us in thine ordinances, how pleasant are thy promises and truths o our heart, and how vigorous and active, and acceptable to thee, are our implanted graces. 13. And, even during the night of trouble or time, how delightfully art thou, our beloved Husband, found in the public and private ordinances of thy grace, and art entertained by the most cordial embracements of our faith and love! 14. O what an inexpressibly delightful and precious system of excellencies, fountain of graces, source of blessings, repository of promises, treasure of pardoning, healing, comforting, nourishing, quickening, and refreshing influence, art thou to our

and in going to Palmyra to-day tourists usually start from Damascus. In the respect that Damascus and Palmyra occupy oases in the midst of surrounding deserts, they are alike. There would be no Damascus were it not for the Abana river. The stream breaks through a gorge in the Lebanon mountains a few miles above the city, and at once begins a warfare with the desert. For 25 miles the conflict between the river and the burning sands of Syria is expressed in a luxurious and tropic regeration.

C.—Eastern shepherds always lea' wheir flocks to some shady spot, if possible beside a fountain, and teave them to rest there for one or two hours during the fierce noonday heat. This is a favourite time for the shepherds themselves to meet with their friends and to recline under shade of tree or rock. P.

Ver. 9. I have compared thee, O my partner. Not for personal accomplishments, but for costliness and beauty of ornaments: even the ornaments of a meek and quiet spirit, which is, in the sight of Heaven, of great price. C.

Ver. 10. The maidens of Palestine wear an ornament composed of gold coins strung together in a row so as to overlap like scale-armour. It passes over the head, down each cheek in front of the ear, and is fastened under the chin. Instead of coins, thin discs of gold and silver were used in ancient times. They also wear numerous chains of gold or silver round the neck. The words of the text are therefore descriptive of a maiden decked in her ornaments. It is also worthy of note that fully caparisoned horses have their bridles covered with little plates of the precious metals, and have also numbers of chains and amulets strung round their necks. How graphic therefore are the words, 'I have likened thee, O my love, to a company of horses in Pharaoh's chariots!' P.

Ver. 14. Camphire. The camphire is a plant, the Lawsonia intermits of botanists. Of the dried leaves an unguent is made, called henna, with which the females of Syria and Egypt dye their nails. Its flowers have a sweet perfume, and eastern maidens often place bunches of them in their bosoms. The plant is still found at Engedi. P.

REFLECTIONS.—How precious and pleasant Christ is to believing souls! Ardently do they pant after further communications of his grace; sensible that they can do nothing of themselves, but Jesus must do all in them and for them. He takes the sweetest delight in speedily answering their prayers, and satisfying their souls with his loving-kindness; though often, amidst his kind visits, their outward state is such as lookers-on are apt to stumble at. REFLECTIONS.—O the unbounded glory and infinite usefulness of Jesus Christ, and the glory and usefulness of his people as connected with him! What must be the imperfect and mediate enjoyment on earth is sometimes so transporting! Unhappy for ever is that heart which would change one hour's fellowship with Christ for all the pleasures, honours, and riches on earth. Tenderly should it be managed, and carefully improved and maintained. A small thing may interrupt it; and with the greatest reluctance and grief should the believing soul mourn over its want. believing soul mourn over its want. Strong as death must be the love of our Redeemer, which makes him come to his people over every mountain of distance, darkness, wrath, provocation, and pollution. How earnest and affecting are his invitations to familiar intercourse with himself! And what a change in the world is made by his oracles, ordinances, and influence But wicked ministers in a church, and carnal lusts in a heart, are our greatest plagues, and should be carefully removed. And the assured faith of our relation to Christ will make us effectually to long and cry for frequent and familiar fellowship with him.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 1. In time of desertion and trouble, and of a secure and slothful frame, in prayer and other private ordinances, I endeavoured to regain the sensible communications of Jesus' love: I persevered therein, but without any discernible succe Stirring up myself therefore to a more active and lively frame of spirit, I attended the public ordinances of his worship, in order to obtain communion with himself. I often repeated my endeavours, but met with nothing but disappointments and discouragements. 3. Faith-ful ministers, who with care and labour inspect the souls of men, were often directed to speak pointedly to my case, which encouraged me to open it to them in familiar conversation, and beg their assistance in furthering my fellowship with him.

4. Not resting in duties and ordinances, by faith I essayed still more earnest and immediate application to Jesus himself. He graciously vouchsafed me his sensible presence. 4. Not resting in Then my heart clave to him by a lively exercise of faith, and by the most ardent and resolute affection. I carefully avoided everything which tended to disturb our fellowship or provoke his withdrawment; and not only laboured to get intimate enjoyment and full assurance of his love to myself, but to have his promised of his people as connected with him! What must be presence in the church and the public ordinances the immediate enjoyment of God and the Lamb, when thereof. 5. I therefore again charge you, my fellow-professors or saints, to avoid everything which may in the least tend to mar my intercourse with him. DAUGHTERS OF JERUSALEM. 6. What amazing persons are those who, separated from the world in affection, and delivered from former troubles, mount up heavenward in faith, in love, in spiritual-mindedness, and in holy desires and conversation;—all acceptable to God through Jesus' merits and intercession, and endowed with the manifold and precious graces of his Holy Spirit!

BELIEVERS. 7, 8. Nay, admire not us, nor the glories which we have freely received from Christ; but behold that new covenant of grace, and that familiar fellowship with him, which are the causes of everything amiable in us, and in which we are watched over and protected, amidst all our dangers, by almighty perfections, attendant angels, and vigilant ministers. 9, 10. Behold how, according to his deep compassion and universal love, he has not only assumed our nature in the most precious and useful form, but has formed a new covenant, and a gospel dispensation,—reared on stable, precious, and supporting promises,—founded in the unchangeable and everlasting love and purpose of God, in which men are protected by his righteousness and royal power; and his unbounded love makes ness and royal power; and his unbounded love makes everything proper, refreshing, and supporting for the members of his church, in order to transport them, in fellowship with him, through this world into the heavenly state! II. Go forth then, my fellow-professors, from your unregeneracy, your self-righteousness, your filthy lusts, your carnal cares and sluggish frames; and with earnestness, faith, love, and wonder observe Jesus, our Prince of Peace, not only crowned by his Father with the highest glory and honour, but even by all the true members of his church, in their acceptance of him, and submission to him, as their Husband, Saviour, and Lord; particularly in that day of power, Saviour, and Lord; particularly in that day of power, and time of love in which, to his inexpressible satisfaction, they are united to him by faith.

Ver. 7. 'In the night.'—That state of comparative darkness in which the believer and the whole church are still surrounded. See Ro. 13.11, 12.—I sought him in his Word for direction, and in his promises for support.—I found him not. The seeker does not say, I believed him not, but 'I found him not'; because for more exercise of faith and faithful seeking, he calls the soul (the church) to add to private contemplation and prayer the observance and use of Christian converse and public ordinances. See ver. 2. C.

REFLECTIONS. - In this world the clearest days of intimate fellowship with Christ are suddenly turned into nights of desertion, trouble, ignorance, and sloth. But precious and dear is Jesus to lively saints;—nothing can content them without his presence and favour; and they count no labour nor suffering too hard to obtain it. Great is his love to them. He is loath to contend long with his people lest their spirit should fail before And an hour, a minute of his presence, richly rewards all their pains and sorrows in seeking for it. Promising is the appearance when the Word p pointedly touches the heart and conscience of hearers. and leads them to careful inquiries concerning Christ. And remarkable fellowship with him effectually animates to an earnest wrestling in behalf of the church and public interests of religion. What extensive honour believers procure to themselves from all around them by an earnest care to maintain fellowship with him, and to follow him in a gracious, upright, and heavenly conversation! But if distinguished saints be so admirable and lovely, how much more is Christ himself and his covenant! With great care ought we to labour to his covenant! have the heart and eyes of all around us fixed on him: for great indeed is his love, that he should take pleasure in espousing to himself poor, guilty, polluted, diseased, wretched, and mischievous sinners of mankind.

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 1-5, 7. Behold how glorious is the state of my church decked with ordinances, officers, and saints! How comely is she when minisofficers, and saints! How comely is she when ministers, her lights, or eyes, are intelligent, modest, humble, and holy, walking in all godly simplicity!—when converts, rooted in me as their Head, grow up in grace and perfect holiness in the fear of the Lord—feeding on the rich pastures of my Word, and surrendering themselves acceptable sacrifices to God!—How comely is the when ministers who preserve spiritual pourish. is she when ministers, who prepare spiritual nourishment for others, are sound in their doctrine, holy in their conversation, harmonious and meek in their behaviour, and active and successful in winning souls to me!-when their ministrations mark the soundness of their hearts!—when their dwelling on redemption through my blood, as their principal theme, renders themselves and their ministrations lively and pleasant and when, with modesty, singleness, prudence, and order they, and other rulers, govern the flocks comorder they, and other rulers, govern the flocks committed to their care!—when they, as superior to others in station, and as means of connecting them with Christ, and of conveying their spiritual nourishment, are upright, steady, and strong, and do watch over the church, and actively improve the whole armour of God for her defence and honour!—and when her various oracles, ordinances, and officers are remarkably useful for supplying the souls of men with the nourishing still. of supplying the souls of men with the nourishing milk of God's Word!—But especially how fair and comely are believers, with respect to their personal capacity, when justified by active faith, and adorned with every spiritual grace !-when their spiritual knowledge, faith, and affection are sincere, single, humble, and seasonably discovered!—when their conversation in thought, word, and deed, notwithstanding many imperfections, is orderly and pure, manifesting a heart nourished in the pastures of the gospel!—when, by re-peated acts of faith and meditation, they improve their spiritual provision; and their zeal for God is uniform, pure, and moderate, animating them to a fruitfulness in good works, and in winning others to me!—when their prayers and converse are profitable and pleasant, discovering the soundness of their heart, animated, and furnished by, and accepted through my blood!—when there is much secret and holy blushing on account of remaining defects — when their faith, which unites them to me, furnishes with and really improves the whole armour of God for their defence from spiritual enemies, as the worthics of God formerly experienced !- when, feeding upon the doctrine of the proenced !—when, feeding upon the doctrine of the prophets and apostles, they, to my inexpressible pleasure, abound in faith and love towards me, and in care to instruct and edify others!—How completely perfect are they in their justification, in the extent of their sanctification, and in my purpose and favourable acceptation. 6, 8. Till not only the gospel dispensation, but even the glorious millannium and the resurrection to ever the glorious millennium, and the resurrection to everlasting life, come, I, according to thy request, ch. 2. 17, will continue to bestow my special presence and influence in my church, which is rendered so delightful by my ordinances, and by the precious graces, prayers, and praises of my people.—Let therefore every one spiritually espoused to me there attend, and hold intimate fellowship with me, setting their affections on things above; forsaking the most excellent creature-satisfactions for my sake, shunning the intimacy of carnal, covetous, and violent men, and even the fellowship of superstitious, erroneous, and persecuting churches. 9, 10. O redeemed soul, partaker of the same human nature with me, begotten and adopted of my Father, and spiritually betrothed to my person, how, even with the weakest acts of thy faith, and the smallest degree of sincere grace and holy obedience, hast thou claimed, attracted, encouraged, and coupled my heart to thee! How incomparably acceptable and delight-ful is thy love, and that sweet fragrancy flowing from ful is thy love, and that sweet tragrancy flowing from thy manifold graces! II. How delightful thy prayers and praise! Thy instructing, reproving, and comforting discourse marks what sweet and nourishing truths and experiences are lodged in thy heart, and how delightful and attractive is thy holy and benevolent conversation! 12-14. My church is a delightful garden, separated from the world, set apart to the service of God digged by gospel ministrations and influences. God, digged by gospel ministrations and influences, and especially protected by my providence, by the rules of order contained in my Word, and a medicinal spring of gospel truth hid from the view of a carnal world! And when purged of scandalous persons, her converts planted in the new kingdom do flourish more fragrant, delightful, precious, and useful, more numerous and different in circumstances, than all the fruit-bearing trees and spices of an orchard!—Yea, every particular believer is a garden set apart in beautiful order, and with infinite care and labour, to the service of God; and has in him the Holy Ghost and a principle of grace, as a well of water springing up into everlasting life: and in the most pleasant manner are their various gifts and graces exercised to my honour, their own advantage, and the edification of others.

Believers. 15. Blessed Jesus! great source and bestower of all life here or hereafter, it is to thy influences alone that we owe all our comeliness, fragrancy, and fruitfulness! let them run more abundantly into our hearts, that, by the exercise of thy grace, we may be rendered more useful to water and refresh others around! 16. And since we are thine, as we'll as under our own care, prevent everything tending to mar our fruitfulness; and let the Holy Ghost, in his convincing and sin-mortifying as well as in his comforting influences, stir up and quicken our hearts to a lively exercise of those gifts and graces with which we are endowed. And do thou, O Jesus, manifest thy presence in thine ordinances, and accept of and delight in those graces and good works which are wrought in us by faith in thyself.

Ver. 2. None is barren. 'None is companionless,' an allusion to the correspondence of the upper and lower teeth, upon which both their beauty and utility so much depend.—Note, Personal beauty, like the other gifts of God, is good, and may, if not abused, be used for most gracious purposes. The details of personal beauty form, accordingly, most appropriate emblems of those gifts of the Spirit wherewith Christ adorns the believer and his bride the church. C.

C.—Fountains shut up and sealed, that is, so covered and inclosed as to be secure against all inspection, are not uncommon in Palestine. There is one at Solomon's Pools. It is in an artificial subterranean chamber, the entrance to which is closed, and a subterranean chamber, the entrance to which is closed, and a subterranean chamber, the entrance to which is closed, and a subterranean of the streams of hife from the believer's heart and gospel ordinances, In 4.4.—Streams from Lebanon. The emblem of the 'good and perfect gifts that come down from the Father of lights,' Ja. 1.17. C.—Perennial streams are very rare in Palestine, but they abound in Lebanon. Their waters are limpid, sparking, and of icy coldness. The streams and fountains of Lebanon are proverbial throughout Syria as emblems of luxury and pleasure. P.

REFLECTIONS,—What infinite love Jesus bears to all people! He puts upon them his own comeliness.

REFLECTIONS.-What infinite love Jesus bears to He puts upon them his own comeliness, when they exercise a living faith in him. Earnest is his desire of their company: and soon shall they be with him where he is, to share his happiness and honour! Never, but when he went to suffer, did he say, Let these go their way. They are a good savour of Christ to all around or above them. And when they rightly behold their own comeliness in him, it effectually humbles them, and makes them ascribe all the glory to him, and to cry for more abundant supplies of his sanctifying influences. Surely it is the greatest honour for them, as his peculiar property, to keep themselves entirely for his service.

CHAPTER V. CHRIST. I. At thy request, be-thy lively preaching, and cordial application of my precious and soul-nourishing truths. I have particularly observed and accepted the graces and services of believers. Let them also feast abundantly on my gospel provision, and take the comfort of their graces and works, as evidences of their faith and great salvation.

BELIEVERS. 2. Alas! the dull and lukewarm frame in which Jesus often finds his churches when he comes to bless them! And how slothful and secure my animal nature had made me, even while my spiritual endeavoured to hear and entertain him! Amidst much deadness and unconcern, I felt some impressions made upon my heart by his Word, Spirit, and rod; while he, in the kindest manner, besought me to exercise my faith and love, and to remove whatever hin-dered his most intimate approaches, as he was closely related to me, had suffered much for me and from me, had waited long for my opening to him, and was much grieved with my neglect of him! 3. In the most piti-ful manner I evaded compliance with his kind invitations, as a thing I was not at present fitted for, and which I could not do without crossing my corrupt inclinations and troubling my flesh. 4. By the immediate power of his Spirit, Jesus touched my heart through his Word, and kindly stirred up my affections to a concern for my former slighting of him, and to an earnest desire after his presence. 5. Repenting of my former stupidity and indifference, and actuated by his influence, I prepared myself to entertain his visit; my faith and other graces put themselves into active and vigorous motion for the removal of everything that tended to hinder his access to my soul. 6. Notwith-standing my vigorous actings of faith upon his self-giving promises, and panting desires after him, I did not obtain any sensible manifestations of his presence. My heart was then filled with pain, grief, and shame at the remembrance of his slighted invitation. I carefully attended his ordinances, public and private, in order to seek and find him: but met with nothing but frowns and disappointments. 7. When ministers touched my case in their discourses, they but raised my hopes and increased my anguish: by their harsh relieving soul, I vouchsafe my special presence in my church and ordinances.

They whose duty it is to prevent power to bear or act in the work of our redemption:

everything tending to disturb the peace and edification of the church questioned the truth of my profession, and charged me with the vilest hypocrisy. 8. O! my fellow-professors, I beg and charge you, that if this my Lord Jesus allow you any sensible intimacy with him-self, you will represent to him the distressed case of my soul, and entreat him speedily to visit me, who earnestly desires him, and am at the point of death for want of his sensible presence.

DAUGHTERS. 9. Distressed, but precious and lovely saint, what means this so solemn charge? What singular and transcendent excellency is in this Jesus, the be-

BELIEVERS. 10. Boundless and incomparable is his excellency! A glorious Godhead and a suffering man-hood, a holiness of heart and life, and a bloody suffer-ing, a glorious exaltation, and a humble debasement, mercy towards his people, and judgment against un-believers, concur to render him in every respect a miracle of beauty! He is infinitely more dignified, kind, rich, and glorious, than all the ten thousands of created beings in heaven and in earth; and, as the great standard-bearer, he goes forth, attended by angels and saints, conquering and to conquer. II. In his divine nature, and as he is the Head of government and influence to all people, he is pure, precious, substantial, glorious, useful, enriching, and unchangeable! Lasting and immutable is his comeliness! Beautiful, mysterious, and majestic are his well-connected purposes and providences! And ever fresh and comely those societies of saints which are rooted and grounded in societies of saints which are rooted and grounded in him! 12. Pure, penetrating, pleasant, beautiful, and comforting is his all-seeing knowledge and his tender pity and care! 13. Delightful the manifestations of his love, glory, and grace! His words are gracious and comfortable, continually refreshing, quickening, and supporting to the souls of his people! 14. Perfect, glorious, and lasting, and all managed with infinite skill, are his munificent liberality, almighty power, and marvellous works, particularly of grace! Sincere, lasting, and wisely ordered for the good of all people, are his great nurposes of love, his tender bowels of mercy his great purposes of love, his tender bowels of mercy and compassion, and his sympathizing intercession! 15. Sufficient and wisely exerted are his strength and

REFLECTIONS. -Quickly, when entreated, does Jesus REFLECTIONS.—Quickly, when entreated, does Jesus come to comfort the hearts and supply the wants of his people; and brings with him for their refreshment the fulness of promises, grace, and joy. Enlarged appetites after spiritual blessings are necessary for gospel hearers. But it is strange that even saints should refuse his gracious visits, for which they had earnestly prayed and patiently waited. Hard is the heart that remains untouched by his effectionate cells, here is the remains untouched by his affectionate calls; base is the temper which renders men careless about him and his influences; and shameful and frivolous are the best excuses which can be made for evading his visits. It is indeed impossible for people wholly to exclude him from their heart; and they procure for themselves great sant when, even under desertion, saints maintain the most exalted view of Jesus' person and fulness, and the most assured faith of their interest in them; and when even curious inquiries concerning him draw forth the warmest commendations of him!

BELIEVERS. 2. Jesus, my beloved, is always pre-sent in his church, and is especially conversant in those assemblies where the graces of the people are most eminent; taking pleasure in and increasing their grace and comforts, and delighting to convert, and afterwards glority, all who accept him.

3. And notafterwards glorify, all who accept him. 3. And not-withstanding all my miscarriages, the mutual relation between him and me is as full and firm as ever; and he still delights himself in the assemblies of his people.

CHRIST. 4. In respect of oracles, ordinances, officers, and order, thou, my church, art extremely beautiful in and order, thou, my church, art extremely beautiful in my view, and terrible to enemies around. And in respect to real righteousness, glorious grace, and holy conversation, thou, O particular believer, art transcendently comely, and thy assured faith and fervent prayer overcome every opponent. 5-7. Such was my delight in the vigorous actings of thy faith and love, and in thy importunate prayers, that I could no longer absent myself; and being returned, I assure thee, for thy comfort, that thy holy thoughts and gracious exercise, thy unfeigned and operative faith, thy spiritual meditations, thy regular and active zeal, thy humility and self-abasement, together with all thy privileges, and everything belonging to my church, are as precious and comely as ever. 8, 9. Whatever beauties there be in earthly courts, there are none comparable to a true saint. In the one true church, nay, in one heavenly begotten soul, there is more real comeliness than in all the world beside; all those of principal esteem, in either church or state, are disposed to express their approbation of it. 10. Gradual was the increasing light and glory of the church in her patriarchal, ceremonial, and gospel periods. Gradual and diversified is the growing comeliness and glory of every believer who truly turns to the light: they shine as the morning light, going on to perfection. In their borrowed grief and toil by neglecting to entertain his offered and disperfect holiness they show fair as the moon; and interest to them who shall be heirs of salvation, He. 1.14. C.

And thy vigorous actings of faith and fervent supplications took such hold of me, that I was constrained, as in a surprising transport of affection, speedily to return to thee in loving-kindness and in tender mercies. 13. Notwithstanding every former offence, return, therefore, my perfect and peaceable one, by faith and repentance, to thy wonted fami-liarity with me, that I and my Father, and blessed Spirit, and ministering angels may, with pleasure and satisfaction, behold thy beauties. However mean and worthless thou art in thy own eyes, yet how pleasant is it for me to behold Jews and Gentiles united into one society of saints, and to contemplate heavenly graces and holy duties withstanding and conquering the remains of inward corruptions, temptations, and make others inquire after him. And it is prudent for deserted saints frequently and boldly to recognize the mutual relation betwixt Christ and their soul. Great is the mercy that, though he often for a time deserts particular child, he never totally forsakes his a particular child, he never totally forsakes his church and ordinances, and often does much good while it is little perceived. How sweet and often surprising are the returns of his sensible presence! For unchangeable is his esteem of, love to, desire after, and delight in all people amidst all the changes of his countenance and providence. Engaging, honourable, and awful are the beauties of holiness when they shine in churches ordinances and saints. And unbounded in churches, ordinances, and saints. And unbounded is Jesus' care about all people, and to have them fruitful in graces and good works. He daily seeks to return them his sensible favours, and to see them cordially united among themselves, and valiantly contend-ing with their spiritual enemies.

Ver. 1. O thou fairest. This character of superlative female beauty, like the panegyric on male beauty, of 5. 12, &c., should have led every expositor to see that the book was never intended for any daughter, of Eve; to any one of whom it had been the grossest flattery, alike degrading to the deceiving utterer and the credulous listener. But how literal the description when applied to her who is adorned by the Spirit with 'the beauty of holiness!' C.

CHAPTER VII. 1-6. Thou, O my visible church, art adorned with ministers shod with the animating preparations of the gospel of peace;—ministers fixed in the most noted station, and contributing to thy inward health and fruitfulness;—strong in grace, and confirmed in the truth, and set for the defence of the gospel;—intelligent in the mystery of Christ, and sagaciously watching against thy spiritual foes.—Thou art also adorned with manifold oracles and ordinances, for the spread of my honour the communication of my for the spread of my honour, the communication of my influences, and edification of my people. - How beautiful, O heaven-born soul, are thy affections and conver-sation, through the powerful influence of gospel truth! Glorious are thy inward principles of holiness, and first motions to good, wrought in thee by the Holy Ghost! Thy racious desires are supplied with nourish-ing influences from above! Plentiful provision, and fruitfulness in holiness, is obtained by the digesting of my word in a particular application of it! Living on the breasts of inspired oracles and instituted ordinances, how glorious and attracting are the exercises of thy faith and love, and of thy holy endeavours to edify others! A sure and precious defence is thy unfeigned and vigorous faith! Clear and distinct is thy spiritual understanding in the matters of God! Wonderful is | thy gracious sagacity in discovering truth, and discerning between good and evil: and attended with courage and watchfulness, especially against the most near, constant, and malicious enemies! Grounded in my blood, and effectually productive of good works, is thy towering hope supported by thy faith! And acceptable in me is even the very smallest part of thy holy principles or practices! 7. So affecting is thy beauty, bestowed by myself, that I cannot but regard thy fellowship, and take pleasure to look on, and abundantly delight in thee.—When the whole of thy graces and holy conversation is considered in connection, how comely, flourishing, victorious, and heavenly is the appearance! And how cordial and cheering to me are thy affection and kind entertainment; 8, 9. In my purpose I resolved, and in my promise I have sought, to manifest myself to my church, in converting nominal members, and vouchsafing my kindest fellowship to real saints.—This shall qualify thee to edify others, and give pleasure and satisfaction to me. Revived, refreshed, and comforted, by my influences, thy gracious discourse shall quicken and awaken others to taste of my love, and to open their mouths in my praise.

BELIEVERS. 10. O the inexpressible comfort which enjoy in the faith of Jesus' relations, and in the intimations of his love to my soul! 11, 12. Beloved Redeemer and husband, let me, retiring from the hurry and cares of this present world, have the most ravishing and permanent fellowship with thee! Let me, without delay, not only have a deep concern for the spiritual prosperity of the church, but have an intimate and distinct knowledge of the condition of my own heart, and see whether my graces be weak or strong, flourishing or languishing. In this our retired communion will I discover the sincerity and fervency of my affection to thee. 13. While the precious, savoury, and medicinal truths of the gospel are to many a savour of life unto life; and while lively believers all around me begin to flourish and spread their heavenly influence; the inward graces of my heart show themselves in lively exercises; and every-

But is not the meaning of the emblem to be found rather in the meaning of the words, which abides, than in any work of art that might soon be destroyed? Heshbon signifies thought; Bath-rabbim, the house of the mighty; that is, 'Thine eyes are pools (bright depths) of intelligence and power. C. Ver. 5. 'Thy braided hair is like the royal purple festooned around the ceilings.'—Note, The word here translated galleries is also (ch. 1, 17) translated raffers: it has also been translated ringlets. The precise meaning of the word is uncertain; but, from its relation to beams (ch. 1, 17), and the fact that eastern ceilings are generally of boards, it has here been rendered ceitings. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Extensive are the beauties of holiness in the church and people of God, and fixed and uniform in the substantials thereof. What delight He is ready to hold the most intimate fellowship with And with ravishing pleasure they glory in him, and in his love towards them. When inwardly warmed by his love, how ready are they to relinquish everything else, in order to have familiar intercourse with him! And a deep concern for the church of Christ, and exact observation of our inward condition, effectually promotes our endeavours to honour him.

CHAPTER VIII. BELIEVERS. I. Blessed Redeemer, O that that happy period were come, in which thou shalt assume our nature, and be a member of our visible church, and, in consequence thereof, admit us to the most intimate fellowship with thee! Then, without regard to reproach or persecution, should I openly profess my reverence, subjection, and affection to thee. 2. Instructed by thy Spirit, I should spread abroad the knowledge of thee in the extended gospel church, and all my gifts and graces should be employed to serve and glorify thee. 3. DAUGHTERS. 5. What admirable person is this, who, forsaking all worldly things for Christ, and delivered from her distressed condition, mounts up heavenward, by faith resting on him to bear her up under every burden, and forward through every duty and difficulty?

BELIEVERS. O Jesus, animated by thy own delightful influence, I have, by importunate prayers, obtained the most sensible manifestations of thy love; as others, in whose hearts thou art formed by faith, have also done. 6, 7. O let thy most endeared esteem, remembrance, and love of my soul, appear remarkably in all thy dispensations towards me: for so vehement and irresistible is my desire after intimate fellowship with thee, that nothing else can afford me satisfaction: no, not death and the grave are so dreadful to me as the fears of thy withdrawment! Kindled by thy love shed abroad in my heart, my love to thee melts all my inward powers, and burns up my corruptions. No inward powers, and burns up my corruptions. No affliction, temptation, desertion, or persecution can extinguish or abate it. Would the richest on earth tempt me from thee, with all his wealth, nay, with ten thousand worlds, I would utterly contemn and abhor the proposal. 8. But, Lord, we have many fellow-sinners, whom thou didst die for; particularly aways, the Gentiles, who may be greatered. among the Gentiles, who enjoy no ordinances, and are yet unripe for their spiritual marriage, being des-titute of faith and love; what shall we do to promote their conversion, when the offers of thy grace shall be made to them?

CHRIST. 9. When, according to my unchangeable purpose, they shall accept me as their foundation, I and my Father and blessed Spirit will endow them with manifold gifts and graces, and render them, in their hearts and church state, a firm tower and beauti-ful temple and palace for God. When the door of access to me shall be opened to them in the gospel, and the door of their heart opened to receive me, we, notwithstanding their insignificancy, weakness, troubles, and temptations, will thoroughly beautify, strengthen, and protect them.

BELIEVERS. 10. Indeed, blessed Redeemer, by thy infinite favour, I have been united to thee, and stand firm on thee as my foundation, and am come to some maturity and perfection in grace. 11. Thou, Lord Jesus, the infinitely wise and wealthy Prince of Peace, hast secured by thy blood, planted and purified by thy grace, sown with thy Word, and protected and managed by thy providence, the large vineyard of thy church. This thou hast committed to the care of thy gospel ministers, that they, by instructions, warnings, eproofs, and censures, might endeavour to their utmost to render the members fruitful in the works of righteousness, to thy praise and glory. 12. And, while the whole concerns of it are under thy special care, I have in charge the vineyard of my own heart, to watch over, defend, purge, and render fruitful in holy habits and exercises. Thou, Jesus, must have the principal honour of all that I am, have, or can attain to, and thy faithful ministers their subordinate share of my love and regard.

CHRIST. 13. Believing soul, who lovest and frequentest the assemblies of my people, and ordinances there dispensed, thy fellow-members regard and listen to thy instructions and warnings for their edification. Let me, when withdrawn from thee, particularly in my bodily presence, often hear thy prayers and praises, and the publication of my gospel in the world.

Believers. 14. And, O my blessed Husband and Saviour, not only maintain frequent and familiar inter-course with my soul, and with thy church on earth, in the instituted ordinances of thy worship, but hasten, hasten thy glorious appearance without sin unto our salvation;—when we shall be caught up to meet thee in the air, and shall, in one complete body, enter that happy, that eternal state, in which God shall be ALL

Ver. 8. The grammar of the passage suggests that the 'daughters of Jerusalem,' who speak (ch. 1-v.), who are still present (ch. 8. 4), are here the solicitous projectors for the welfare of the 'little sister.' This emblem has been expounded of the Gentile church—but it seems much more natural to understand by it such as are yet 'weak in the faith,' Ro. 14, 21, 52, 21 (Co. 3, 22 Ep. 4, 13, C. Ver. 10. This has generally been considered as the answer of the 'little sister,' exemplifying full and instantaneous 'growth in grace.' But as the grammar will not warrant any change from the speaker in the first person (ver. 1, 2, 4) and the speaker in the first person (ver. 1, 2, 4) and the speaker in the first person (ver. 10, this must be understood as the language of the bride, encouraging the 'little sister' by her own experience of grace and attainments in faith. C. Yer. 11. Baal-hamon, ruler of multitudes.—The keepers represent the rulers and instructors of the churches in their multitudes.—A thousand. As the annual rent for a vine seems to have been ordinarily a piece of silver, 18, 7, 23, the emblem indicates that return of 'fruit of the Spirit,' Ga. 5, 22, which is ever due in correspondence to privileges. C.

Ver. 13. Thou that dwellest in the gardens. It is impossible by the grammar to distinguish the speaker in ver. 14; and as in ver. 14 she calls to the listener, my beloved, the speaker is the bride calling to her Redeemer, 'Even so, come, Lord Jesus!' Re. 22, 17, 20. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How kind, how marvellous is it, but the call to the listener.

REFLECTIONS. - How kind, how marvellous is it, that God's only begotten Son, the brightness of his glory, has, by his assumption of our nature, become our brother, and will for ever continue bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh! And great is the mercy, that to him the gathering of the Gentiles hath and shall be! It is pleasant to remember past experiences of his love in the assured expectations of others still more sweet! And delightful is the frame, ardent the desires, and fervent the prayers, when a soul is overwhelmed with the consolations of Christ! Importunate intercession for the spiritual welfare of others often produces remarkable fellowship with him. Extensive produces remarkable fellowship with him. Extensive revenues of holy thoughts, words, and deeds are due from every member of the church to Jesus Christ. And they who give him his due, will give his ministers theirs. But how strongly Christ and his people's hearts must be knit one to another! They cannot live but as it were in mutual intercourse. Soon will he come to take them to himself in elements. come to take them to himself in glory; and, in the believing view of it, their waiting spirits cry, 'Even so, come, Lord Jesus.'

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE SONG OF SOLOMON.

Three points present themselves to the Christian reader and student in the pre- | He. 1. 8 there is found a direct address from God the Father to God the Son. ceding book:—

I. Was this book received into the canon of Holy Scripture, and sanctioned by our Lord and his apostles? To this there can be but one answer—it was.

II. Are there, in the New Testament, any such evident references as form a key 11. Are there, in the New 1 estament, any such evident references as form a key to its interpretation? Such evident references may be found, Mat. 21. 33, when comp. with Song 8, 11; Ep. 5. 27, comp. with Song 4, 1, 7; Ep. 6. 15, comp. with Song 7, 1; Re. 3. 20, comp. with Song 5. 2. Other references have been suggested, but these are so evident as not to admit of question.

III. Are there such quotations of passages of Scripture parallel to or identical with the Song of Solomon, by which its spiritual import can be unquestionably established? The answer to this question is easy and direct. (1) By referring to

(2) That address is quoted from Ps. 45. 6. (3) It is impossible to overlook the complete parallelism, nay identity, of that psalm with the scenery and character of the Song of Solomon. Therefore, by following the scriptural plan—comparing spiritual with spiritual, and the natural law of all interpretation—rising from what is plainly stated, granted, or ascertained, to what is less plain, questioned, or yet unknown, there can be no difficulty in coming to the conclusion, that the Song of Solomon forms a succession of emblems whereby the mutual love and union between Christ and his church are described for the instruction and comfort of the impure all things are impure. And such is the state of the carnal mind, that | just in proportion as any object is good, in like proportion may it be perverted to purposes of evil. Thus—just in proportion as a medicine is powerful to restore, may its improper administration render it powerful to destroy. And thus grace, in its every form, may be turned into licentiousness. But is the sufferer, therefore, to be deprived of a powerful medicine?—or is the physician who discovered and prescribed it to be pronounced an evil-doer? Is the sinner, therefore, to be deprived of access to pardon; and the God of all grace and consolation to be disrobed of his attribute of mercy? No. And neither is the church of God to be deprived of some of the brightest pages in the divine Word, because eyes that have 'loved darkness' cannot perceive their beauties.

To those who have observed what a prominent place love to Jesus holds in the New Testament (see for example, Jn. 14. 23; I Co. 16. 22; 2 Co. 5. 14), and to those who have experienced and rejoiced in 'the assurance' of that love—the Song of Solomon will ever furnish a subject of study, at once most delightful and pro-

The various modes of interpreting this remarkable and extremely difficult book may be classified under three heads: The Literal, the Typical, and the Allegorical.

I. The Literal makes the book a simple story related in the form of a dramatic poem. The facts of the story are given by Dr. Ginsburg as follows:- 'A village girl, the daughter of a widowed mother of Shulam, is betrothed to a young shepherd, whom she met whilst tending the flock. Fearing lest the frequent meetings of these lovers should be the occasion of scandal, the brothers of the Shulamite employ her in the vineyard on the farm. Whilst on the way to this vineyard she one day falls in with the cortége of King Solomon, who is on a spring visit to the country. Struck with her beauty the king captures her, conveys her to his royal pavilion, then conducts her to Jerusalem in great pomp, in the hope of dazzling and overcoming her with his splendour, and eventually lodges her in his harem. But all is in vain. True to her virtuous love, she resists all the allurements of the exalted sovereign, spurns all his promises to elevate her to the highest rank, and in the midst of the gay scenes assures her humble shepherd, who followed her to the capital, that her affections are sacredly and inviolably pledged to him. Solomon, convinced at last that all his advances are in vain, allows her to quit the royal residence. Hand in hand the two faithful lovers return to her native place, and on their way home visit the tree under which their love-spark was first kindled, and there renew their vows of constancy and fidelity. On their arrival they are welcomed by their companion shepherds, and she is rewarded by her brothers for her exemplary virtue.' It is said that the object or moral of this charming story is 'to teach a lesson of practical righteousness by the record of an extraordinary example of virtue in a young maiden in humble life who encountered and conquered the greatest temptations from the most exalted personage in the land.' The theory is attractive, and the arguments employed in defence of it are not without weight; but I think the thoughtful student of God's Word, and especially such as have studied the genius of oriental poetry and imagery, will see that there is something higher and nobler in this book, than such a moral lesson. And, besides, I cannot see that the various parts of the book can be made at all to harmonize with such a simple and detailed story. In my mind the imagery is too sublime, the descriptions of far too elevated a character, to be applied even by an eastern poet to any mere narrative of real life.

2. The Typical theory of interpretation adopts as a basis the historical truth of the narrative, making the bride either Pharaoh's daughter, or some maiden of Palestine, whom Solomon had loved and married; but then this bride typified the church, and Solomon typified Christ, while the whole story was designed to represent in prophetic imagery the love subsisting between Christ and his church—a love mutual, indissoluble, and eternal. The great difficulty in the way of this theory is to establish the historical character of the narrative. A type must be a fact;

3. The Allegorical interpretation of the book seems to me to be the only possible and true one. The poem is conceived in the loftiest style of eastern imagery. Incidents of real life, events of everyday occurrence, customs which still prevail in the East form a groundwork, but they are all idealized and spiritualized, so that they may more strikingly exhibit to the pure and spiritual mind, grand divine The leading image is common in Scripture. Human love in its purest and holiest type-that of husband and wife-is the symbol of the love of Christ and his chirch, of God and his people. Thus Isaiah says, 'Thy Maker is thine husband: the Lord of hosts is his name,' ch. 54. 5; and still more clearly: 'For thou shalt no more be termed Forsaken; neither shall thy land any more be termed Desolate; but thou shalt be called Hephzibah, and thy land Beulah; for the Lord delighteth in thee, and the land shall be married. . . . As the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee,' ch. 62. 4, 5. The fortyfifth Psalm greatly resembles this book in style and imagery. So also the same initial results greatly resembles this book in style and imagery. So also the same imagery is common in the New Testament: 'I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ," 2 Co. 11. 2. The whole bearing and force of that beautiful passage in Ep. 5. 22–33 rest upon this same figure. The apostle John too, in the last book of the Sacred Canon, appears to embody the very idea of the Song of Solomon, when he records his glorious vision: And I John saw the Holy City, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband.'

This is substantially the system of interpretation which was adopted generally by the Jews, and is developed in the Talmud. By them, of course, God is represented as the Beloved, and the people of Israel the loved one. In the early Christian church, the same view was taken, and was held almost universally until impugned by Erasmus. It appears to me to be in accordance with the analogy of Scripture, and with the genius of eastern poetry. The whole structure of the composition, too, discursive, yet having a subjective coherence, tends to the same conclusion. There is in it no sustained plot, no crisis of a story. It consists of expressions of most devoted affection, with reference to localities and ever-changing scenery, all adapted to call forth new emotions, and to exhibit unalterable love. Viewed in this light, interpreted in this manner, it is one of the purest and noblest portions of Holy Writ. It lifts the mind into an ideal world of spiritual communion with God in Christ. It shows us his tenderness, his watchful care, his devoted unceasing attachment to his people in all their waywardness, temptations, sorrows, and persecutions, such as we can see nowhere else. It shows us that friends and kindred-the nearest and dearest, may desert us in the hour of trial, but God will not and cannot, for love binds him to us and us to him by a tie that is Yet, still, holy, pure, and comforting as this book is to the man whose nature the Spirit of God has mastered, the profitable reading of it by the ordinary Christian is confessedly difficult. Each one knows his own heart, and can best review his own feelings. But in this western land, where we are not accustomed to the gorgeousness of eastern imagery, or the nature of eastern life and manners, we need watchfulness, prayer, and a heart completely under the control of the sanctifying Spirit, if we would derive from this book those noble lessons which God

It is sometimes said that the Song of Solomon is not quoted or referred to in the New Testament, and that therefore it cannot have that high spiritual significancy which I have above advocated. In reply I quote the words of Hengstenberg:—
'The New Testament is pervaded by references to the Song of Songs, and all of them are based on the supposition that it is to be interpreted spiritually. Proportionally no book of the Old Testament is so frequently referred to, implicitly or explicitly, in the New Testament, as this one; and we cannot but be surprised at the superficiality or the prejudices of those who have asserted that the Song of Songs is never quoted in the New Testament.' The following passages afford and the narrative here has all the characteristics of ideality as distinguished from reality. No writer, however poetical, would describe ordinary events in such language as is employed in ch. 2. I-4, 14; 6. 10-12; and no writer, even in the East, would put such language in the mouth of a virtuous maiden as we find in ch. i. ii. viii.

Ep. 5. 27.—P.

The following passages afford ample proof that its language and spirit were constantly before the mind of our Lord and his apostles, Mat. 6. 28-30; 13. 25; 24. 42, 21. 33; 26. 6-13; Mar. 14. 3; Lu. 12. 35-37; 13. 31, 32; 7. 38; Jn. 6. 44; 7. 33, 34, 12. 3; 21. 16; 3. 29; 2. I-11; Ep. 5. 27.—P.
